Prosecutor Hints at Protection for Mrs. J. Morgan Smith if She Tells All---Vigorous Objection by Lawyer Levy Halts Testimoney of Accused Girl's Sister.

By Boston American Leased Wire.

NEW YORK, April 28.—For the second time the so-called threatening letter written by Nan Patterson's sister to "Caesar" Young has been ruled out by Recorder Goff. Flushed with his success yesterday in partly establishing a motive for the murder of "Caesar" Young, of which Nan Patterson is accused, Assistant District Attorney Rand tried to-day to make that motive, Young's broken promise to marry Nan Patterson, more pronounced.

Mrs. J. Morgan Smith, who wrote the letter in which she said she would not answer for the consequences to Young, intimating revenge by her sister, the "Florodora" girl, was again on the stand to-day when court opened. Mr. Rand proceeded with the direct examination, trying to fix in the jury's mind the agitation and frenzy of the pretty defendant when she heard that Young would never marry her.

When this line had been exhausted Mr. Rand turned to the alleged conspiracy existing between Nan Patterson and J. Morgan Smith and his wife. Mrs. Smith refused to answer questions as to her movements on July 8, 1904, because they would tend to degrade and incriminate her. She is under indictment for alleged conspiracy, and she took this course at the suggestion of her lawyer.

"I OBJECT," SAID LEVY.

"If I quash the indictment you are no longer in danger," suggested Mr. Rand.

"I object," said Mr. Levy.

"This witness," said Mr. Rand, addressing the court, "has information which is essential to the prosecution and——"

"I ask the court to instruct Mr. Rand to desist on this line of examination," interrupted Mr. Levy.

Mr. Levy's objection was sustained.

It is believed now that the State will close to-day, and then there will probably be an adjournment to Monday, at which time the defence will announce its intention as to whether or not a defence will be offered. Nan Patterson seemed in excellent spirits for the greater part of the morning session. The usual large crowd was present.

Made Her Frantic.

Mrs. J. Morgan Smith, Nan's sister, resumed the stand at the opening of to-day's session. She had on the same costume she wore yesterday. Her examination was continued by Mr. Rand.

Q.—Did I understand you to say yesterday that there was no talk at all about Nan going to be married to Young when you and May Queen were visiting her? A.—Yes, there was some talk.

Q.—Did she say anything about what Leslie Coggins had said? A.—She said she did not believe Young had told Coggins that it would be best for her to marry Trimble.

Q.—Did she tell you that the cause of her emotion was because Coggins had said that? A.—It was the cause.

Q.—Did she say so? A.—Not in so many words.

Q.—In effect did she say so? A.—Yes.

Q.—I understand you to say that Coggins had told you that Young had said to him that he never intended to marry her? A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—Well, and is that what put your sister into such a wild and frantic condition on May 3? A.—Because Coggins had spoken so deceitfully.

Mr. Levy Objected.

Q.—It was twofold then, wasn't it; first because Coggins had spoken so deceitfully, and, secondly, because Young had put off the divorce proceedings that was to bring him to liberty and marry her? A.—Yes, sir.

Q.—Did Nan tell you on that day anything about doing anything to herself or to Young? A.—No, sir.

Q.—Did Nan say to you what the consequences would be if he didn't do what he had promised? A.—No, I don't recollect anything like that.

Q.—Did you, while Nan was present, write to "Caesar" Young that unless he did what was right you would not answer for the consequences?

"I object to this," said Mr. Levy.

"Overruled," said the Recorder.

"I did write the letter," said Mrs. Smith, and the letter was offered in evidence.

Q.—Was the letter written in consequence of what Nan had said to you? A.—In consequence of the feeling brought on through my conversation with my sister.

Q.—Were these feelings brought on by what Nan said? A.—No, by what Mr. Coggins had said, and, in brief, by the conversation I had with Nan.

Letter Again Ruled Out.

Q.—Did that letter truthfully reflect your feelings? A.—Yes.

PRESIDENT ILL; MUST GO HOME

Slight Fever Attack and International Complications Cut Hunting Trip Short.

NEW CASTLE, Col., April 28.—President Roosevelt has been forced to leave the chase and return to his camp because of a slight attack of fever. His condition is not serious.

WASHINGTON, April 28.—The critical relations between the United States and foreign nations, and especially the Venezuelan situation, have determined President Roosevelt to abandon his hunting trip a week earlier than he had intended.

Dispatches received here from Glenwood Springs, Colorado, announce that the President will break camp on May 8, and start for the national capital at once.

The only stops he will make will be at Denver and Chicago, where the dates for his reception have been advanced to meet the new arrangement.

German Relations Strained.

The relations between the United States and Germany have become somewhat strained over the proposal of Germany to bring the high tariff people of the United States to terms. The Venezuelan complication is another cause of anxiety.

On the heels of the personal quarrel between Castro and Bowen, however, comes the alleged personal onslaught of Bowen on Minister Loomis. It is reported that the President will transfer Bowen and replace him with the United States minister at Rio Janeiro.

It is understood that President Castro's reply to Secretary Taft, forwarded post haste several days ago, and which Secretary Loeb at once took to the President, was of such a character as to demand Mr. Roosevelt's immediate action, and it is thought he considers the matter more serious than it was believed to be by Mr. Taft.

Another matter is the case of the Department of Justice against the Santa Fe road, for which the President appointed two special attorneys, Harmon and Judson.

Assistant Secretary of State Loomis has issued a statement in which he denies flatly all of the charges preferred against him by an article in a New York newspaper, alleging that while he was United States minister at Caracas he made his official position a means of adding to his wealth.

Loomis Denies Charges.

"The statement that I obtained $10,000 from the New York and Bermudez Asphalt Company as a pecuniary benefit from that company is an absolute falsehood. On my final departure from Caracas I had money in the bank there, and as every one who ever lived in Venezuela knows the high rates of exchange, I arranged with that company to transfer checks with them. My check to the company called for Venezuelan money, and their check to me for United States money. Any statement to the contrary is an absolute falsehood.

"I never purchased any claim against the Venezuelan Government, and never agreed with Charles Meyers of Columbus, O., to collect a claim of $10,000,000 for one-seventh of that sum."

Secretary Taft has cabled Minister Bowen at Caracas to return to Washington immediately and substantiate the charges he made against Loomis. If he cannot make good his charges there is every probability that he will no longer serve the United States as minister to Venezuela.

GOV. DOUGLAS SIGNS BOSTON SCHOOL BILL

PRESENT COMMITTEE IS ABOLISHED AND A BOARD OF 5 IS TO BE ELECTED.

Governor Douglas to-day signed the bill which abolishes the present Boston school committee and substitutes a committee of five to be elected at the next city election.

The present membership of the school committee is twenty-four.

The bill signed by Governor Douglas is the result of a petition of James J. Storrow and others. Mr. Storrow is a former member of the school committee, and early in the present session of the Legislature he began his campaign for the reduction in the number of members.

There was great opposition on the part of members of the present committee, politicians and labor leaders. Mr. Storrow personally conducted the work of putting the merits of his bill before the members of the Legislature.

After its passage by the House and the Senate, the opposition brought strong pressure to bear on Governor Douglas to prevent his signing the bill. The Governor gave the matter careful consideration before affixing his signature.

It is provided that the committee shall serve without compensation. At the next election there will be elected two members for three years, two members for two years and one for one year. At each municipal election followingg there shall be elected for the term of three years so many prsons as may be necessary to fill the places of the member or members whose term or terms are about to expire.

CLARK FORGOT LECTURE DATE

Ellery H. Clark, of Boston, was to have been the chief speaker before the State Federation of Women's Clubs at New Bedford yesterday, but he forgot the appointment and did not appear. His subject as announced was to have been "The Cruelty to Children Society." An interesting programme was carried out with the exception of Mr. Clark's lecture.

MY RAIDS PUT DAMPER ON GAMBLING IN LYNN

—CHIEF OF POLICE BURCKES

HEAD OF POLICE FORCE DENIES HE HAS "UNDERSTANDING" WITH MAYOR EASTMAN.

Lynn Chief Should Resign, Says Douglas, If Unable to Stop Crime

In reference to the situation at Lynn Governor Douglas to-day dictated the following statement:

"If the Chief of Police confesses his inability to prevent crimes as he is alleged to do, it would be entirely fitting that he should tender his resignation to the proper authorities.

"Should the City Government finally find itself unable to cope with local conditions and ask assistance of the Commonwealth, I think it would be time for the State Police to enforce the law, and not till then."

Special to the Boston American.

LYNN, April 28.—Chief of Police Thomas M. Burckes, in an interview with a reporter of the BOSTON AMERICAN to-day, emphatically denied that there was any understanding between him and Mayor Eastham about permitting gambling in Lynn.

The chief said that he and the Mayor had talked about gambling and as a result the vice had been suppressed about as effectually as possible in any city the size and character of this one. He declared that he proposed to prosecute vigorously any case when he could obtain evidence, but he needed more police with which to secure it.

"I did say at the meeting of the Common Council this week that I had seen Mayor Eastham," said Chief Burckes, "and it is true that I have talked over the matter of gambling here in Lynn with the Mayor, and I have my orders.

"As a result of the talk with the Mayor, I am following certain directions which will help to clear Lynn of gambling, so far as it is possible. I have regular policemen in citizens dress watching every place where gambling is suspected of being carried on and I propose to prosecute wherever evidence can be secured.

"Gambling in Lynn is not wide open today, and the result of my raids has practically put a damper upon the vice, and it will remain so if it is within my power. It is a fact that I need more regular policemen. Lynn, for a city of its population, should have at least twenty more regular officers. With the additional officers I would be able to get evidence against gambling men better than I can now with my present number of men."

Duties of Inspectors.

At the Common Council meeting on Tuesday Chief Burckes said that his In-

RUSSIAN SQUADRONS IN STRAITS OF MALACCA

PENANG, Straits Settlement, April 28.—The British steamer Catherine Apcar reports passing two squadrons last night in the Straits of Malacca, sixty miles south of Penang, both apparently bound for Singapore.

There were eight vessels in the first squadron and seven in the second.

SAIGON, Cochin China, April 28.—The Russian squadron and the transports accompanying it, which have been lying off Kamranh Bay, have sailed. The destination of the fleet, which is being followed by four German colliers, is not known, but it is probably the Island of Hainan, where Rojestvensky is reported.

SAIGON, Cochin China, April 28.—There is a belief here, based on direct information from Kamranh Bay, that Admiral Rojestvensky intends to enter the Pacific Ocean and go to Vladivostok by the long route. From the same sources it is learned that Nebogatoff's division is expected to reach Indo-Chinese waters to-day.

LONDON, April 28.—Lloyd's dispatch from Calcutta says Admiral Rojestvensky has captured the British steam[illegible] Beatrice, bound from Saigon to [illegible] contraband. It is feared [illegible] steamers similarly loaded [illegible]ptured.

WHISKEY LED TO QUARREL; MURDER FOLLOWED

POLICE SEEK MOTIVE IN THE YOUNG TRAGEDY

Mrs. Nellie Ashe Says Dalton, N. H., Killing Could Not Have Been on Her Account.

Special to the Boston American.

WHITEFIELD, N. H., April 28.—In order to furnish a motive for the killing of John Young by his friend, Plummer Bacon, the local authorities are to-day looking for witnesses to a quarrel that is said to have taken place on the day of the shooting, during which, it is said, the name of Mrs. Nellie Ashe, an acquaintance of both young men, was mentioned.

Was jealousy at the bottom of the clash between the two boys? If so, Mrs. Ashe, who is a comely woman of twenty-eight, says that it could not have been on her account. Both Young and Bacon were under twenty. The former boarded at the home of Lorenzo Ashe, the husband of the woman mentioned.

Bacon is held on the charge of murder. Also under arrest as an accessory before the fact is William Mann, a friend of Bacon, who was in his company on the day of the tragedy. In his cell at Lancaster Bacon said that he could not tell how the shooting occurred. He is apparently just beginning to realize the seriousness of his situation, but still appears dazed.

Letters May Point Motive.

The authorities have information to the effect that Bacon wrote some letters that may throw some light on the cause of the fatal quarrel. An attempt is being made to get hold of these letters.

The investigation of the case will be directed with a view of ascertaining if the murder of Young, and possibly that of Mrs. Ashe, were plotted by the two prisoners some hours before Young met his fate, and if Mrs. Ashe escaped only through the quick action of her husband who knocked the rifle from Bacon's hands.

Bacon, Mann and Young entered the barroom in the Whitefield Hotel about noon on the day of the murder and had several drinks. While at the bar both men were heard disputing. The discussion at first was of a bantering, good natured kind, but both men soon grew excited, and the more they drank the more bitter became the conversation. Mann did not participate in the argument while in the hotel.

After leaving the hotel the three men went to another saloon near the depot and continued drinking heavily. What happened on the way to the farm in Dalton, which is four miles over muddy country roads, has not been ascertained in detail.

Separated by Ashe.

The district is so sparsely settled that no one has been found who saw them fighting, although there is reason to believe that the men engaged in fisticuffs more than once before reaching the farmhouse, at which place Young and Bacon fought on the mountainside until they were separated by Lorenzo Ashe.

Bacon has never been twenty miles from the farm on which he lived with his father. Through the indulgence of his parents he has never worked steadily, but roamed through the woods. He did not show a quarrelsome disposition, however, previously, while visiting this town.

Mann is but eighteen years of age, a tall, overgrown country youth in manner and appearance. It is probable Bacon's defence will be insanity, as his relatives aver that he has shown on more than one occasion mental peculiarities. His relatives will obtain legal advice for him, but in the case of Mann the county will have to furnish a lawyer for his defence.

Big Crowd at Funeral.

Mrs. Ashe has sought seclusion at the home of her sister, Mrs. Miller, on Dalton road. She has declined to even see her friends. The Ashes have removed their belongings from the farmhouse, and Mr. Ashe will locate some distance from this town at another farm.

The body of Young was buried at Ashland yesterday. The funeral was at the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Sawyer. Young's real name, it appears, is Sawyer, but he has always been known as Young and the authorities have used that name in connection with the tragedy. Because of the sensational nature in which the young man met his death the funeral attracted a great crowd.

The little house where the murder was committed has become an object of interest to the whole countryside, and scores of people have driven thither from far and near. They are repaid at the journey's end by the magnificent view, which is one of the best in this region. Dalton Mountain stands behind it and Cherry Mountain in Jefferson in front, with the White Mountain range as a background. Forest Lake can plainly be seen at the foot of the hill, a spot visited by hundreds of tourists each year.

One of the Oldest Houses.

E. L. Were, of Dalton, one of the oldest residents, who has lived in Dalton since a boy, says the house must be one of the oldest in town and that he cannot remember when it did not stand there. He knows the Bacon family well, and says the grandfather was a grand old man, with sturdy principles and a strong churchman.

PERSONS AND SCENES IN DALTON MURDER

LYNN POLICE CHIEF TALKS ON GAMBLING

spectors did not have orders to investigate gambling cases, and in reference to these men he sal dto-day:

"Inspectors are not members of the police force for that purpose. They have higher and more difficult work mapped out for them. The regular officers are fully capable of stamping out gambling, provided we have enough of them.

"The policy of the city of Lynn, as is well known, is to keep down expenses as far as possible, and we are hampered for this reason."

In answer to the question at the Common Council meeting: "Cannot your officers enter buildings where they suspect gambling is carried on?" to which the Chief replied: "No, sir, not without a warrant," he said:

"What if my officers could enter any house where they suspected gambling was being carried on? What protection would any home have in its pdivacy if officers could enter when they desired and search for evidence?

"The law specifically states that an officer cannot enter a house for the purpose of securing evidence unless he is armed with a warrant and in order to get these warrants issued the policeman must be satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt that there is gambling going on.

"I want to make a correction of my statement that I could not stop gambling in Lynn. What I meant was that I cannot stop this policy writing in these different shoe shops and other places. I have been in Lynn for forty-five years and gambling here to-day is not much more prevalent than it was then. You cannot stop it and you never can entirely eliminate it in any city, but there are no nortorious gambling dens in Lynn at present.

Must Have Larger Force.

"Unless my force is augmented, the evil of special policemen must remain. I call it an evil because I do not have full power over these officers.

"It is possible that some of these special officers do not work for the common good of the city.

"Thus it is a difficult matter to prefer charges against them.

"All this talk about the wickedness of Lynn rather amuses me, as well as other city officials. We have known that gambling and other vices exist in Lynn, and this condition will always remain, no matter how well equipped the police department is or how energetic it is in its endeavor to rid the city of all gambling."

Councilman Frank A. Turnbull, independent, from Ward 2, who has taken an active part in the campaign against gambling here, in an interview with a BOSTON AMERICAN reporter, said:

"I do not question the fact that gambling exists in Lynn. I do not approve it, and I would do all in my power to stop it in our city, for as a member of the city government I believe it is the duty of every public servant to do all he can to preserve the fair name of this city and protect the business interests of the citizens.

No Proof of "Protection."

"With all this talk of gambling and collusion between the police and the gambling element in Lynn, nothing has yet been produced to convince me that any member of the city government, from the Mayor to the chief of police, is receiving a cent for protection. I resent the statement that Lynn is the wickedest of cities, but where so many factories abound it is not surprising that certain evils do exist.

"Personally I do not believe that special officers should be employed unless they are in uniform, and contend that any man who wears a policeman's uniform should be under the direction and orders of the city marshall.

"I was surprised to hear Chief Burckes tell the Common Council that all special police officers were not under his control. If the city needs more policemen, Chief Burckes should have them.

"Mayor Eastham, in my mind, is an honest official, and I do not believe that he is connected in any deal to afford protection to the gambling element in Lynn."

COUNCIL VOTE TO REDISTRICT OF NO AVAIL

The action of the Common Council, which, by a vote of 41 to 27, decided to redistrict the city according to wards, it is not believed will prove of any avail, because such action would have to be coincided in by the Board of Aldermen, and that body of the city government will not meet in time to consider the matter.

Mayor Collins told a reporter of the BOSTON AMERICAN to-day that he would not call a special meeting of the Board of Aldermen for this purpose unless the board requested him to do so.

"The board tied its hands by voting to adjourn until Monday," said the Mayor. "That is too late to act on this matter. If they want me to untie theier hands I'll do it at their request, but not otherwise."

HEREDITARY TENDENCIES

The Legacy of Hate and Physical Defeat—Responsibility of Parents.

The child is like its father and mother. Like begets like. It's a law of nature. Mental and moral traits are also transmitted to our children. Unfortunately evil tendencies and physical defects are handed down as well as our good qualities. The son of a moderate drinker becomes a drunkard. He's got it in his blood. Disease is more often the legacy than health. What a heritage of hate! Diseased and impure blood may and does taint three or more generations and affect their lives with misery and woe. What, then, is the responsibility of the husband and wife since their actions affect not only their own health and lives, but the health, the lives and happiness of generations yet unborn! Perfect health is their duty!

Every man and woman who hopes to become a parent should cleanse, purify and strengthen the system with Dr. Green'e Nervura blood and nerve remedy. The neglect of this duty is a crime. If you blood is tainted with any form of blood disease; if your vital force or manly vigor is impaired by early excesses; if your nerves are unstrung; your digestion impaired; your kidneys and liver out of order, take Dr. Greene's Nervura and be cured. Mothers, if you are weak and nervous, if you have any kind of female troubles, take Dr. Greene's Nervura and strengthen and fortify your system. Make yourself fit to be the mother of a beautiful child, and God will grant your heart's desire.

4,000 AFRICAN NATIVES SLAIN

MARSEILES, April 28.—A mail report which has just arrived here from the Congo states that 8,000 natives armed with rapid fire guns attacked Captain Avert's mission and that only the captain and six soldiers escaped, after a heroic defence. Of the 8,000 natives who participated in the attack 4,000 were killed.

FRANKLINS OBSERVE 10TH ANNIVERSARY

The tenth anniversary of the Franklin Association, T. P. P. and A. U., was celebrated by a ball in Roughan Hall, Charlestown, and was one of its most successful social functions. Among the guests were Martin J. Higgins, international president of the Printing Pressmen's Union; Representative Daniel J. McDonald, Alderman Frank J. Linehan, Councilman Eugene C. Brazzell, Councilman Leo F. McCollough, Frank O'Hare and James Slatter. Daniel J. Sullivan was floor director and Michael [illegible] O'Connor was his assistant.

COUPLE WED IN QUARRY PIT

SOUTH PARIS, Me., April 28.—"Come up out of the pit and be married," shouted Miss Alena Wantman to Andrew Lakestrom, who was drilling at the bottom of a stone quarry 200 feet below the earth's surface.

"I can't spare the time," the man shouted back. "I need the money."

The couple had been engaged a long time. Miss Wantman sent a messenger to the Rev. W. M. Strout, and when he arrived the two went to the bottom of the quarry. Lakestrom slipped a sweater over his working jacket, and while the other workmen stood around as witnesses the ceremony was performed.

"Nothing like making a man do as he agrees," said Mrs. Lakestrom, as she and the minister got back to the top of the earth. Lakestrom continued work during the night.

LYNN STRIKE BROKEN; SHOE WORKERS WIN

STITCHERS' STRIKE ENDS

Special to the Boston American.

LYNN, April 28.—Cushman & Hebert, shoe manufacturers on Union street, agreed to the price demanded by their lasters who went on strike a few days ago and the men returned to work to-day. They have been given an increase of about 2 per cent. Fifty men were on strike.

The strike of the girl stitchers in the Harney Brothers factory has been broken. Many of the girls have returned to work on the proposition made by the firm, which they were advised to do by Miss Margaret Hamilton, their leader. They struck because of a decrease in price per pair and objection to the foreman of the stitching room.

VANISHED WITH WOMEN'S CASH, SAY POLICE

The Boston police have been asked to search for Earl P. Wheeler, former collector for the Massachusetts Banking & Loan Company of No. 43 Tremont street, who is wanted in South Framingham on a charge of larceny. It is charged by the police that Wheeler has taken about $600 from women about South Framingham.

Wheeler had a room on Concord street, but when a call was made there it was found that he had not occupied his quarters for several days, and the landlady could not account for his absence.

The young man was dismissed from the employ of the Massachusetts Banking and Loan Company about three months ago. There came complaints to the concern that one of their men had collected money from people of Sherborn and South Framingham, on the suggestion that it be deposited with the banking company, the police say.

Investigation showed that one woman had given $350, which she had in the bank, to Wheeler, and another woman had turned over $100, it is charged. There were a number of other small amounts about which complaints were made.

It was discovered that after leaving the employ of the company the young man called on the depositors and in several cases he had opened the banks and abstracted the contents, the police allege.

Until a short time ago Wheeler had a room in South Framingham. He was not at home when the police called and has not appeared there since.

Wheeler is twenty-three years old and came from South Woodbury, Vt., to Hopedale, where he worked in a grocery store. Then he entered the employ of the Equitable Savings Bank of Boston after that concern went out of business he secured a similar position with the Massachusetts Banking and Loan Company, where he remained until his dismissal.

FITZHUGH LEE IS STRICKEN WITH APOPLEXY

Suffers Severe Attack While On Federal Express From Boston to Washington.

ARRIVES AT THE CAPITAL

WASHINGTON, April 28.—General Fitzhugh Lee was stricken with a severe attack of apoplexy while en route to this city last night from Boston, aboard the Federal express of the Pennsylvania railroad.

The train arrived in Washington at 10:05 to-day, and was met by Surgeon-General O'Reilly of the army, who gave the General medical attendance. An ambulance was in waiting to convey him to a hospital.

Dr. Richard C. Cabot, a well-known physician of Boston, was on the train when General Lee was stricken, and attended him until the arrival at Washington.

A consultation of several physicians who were called into the case was had shortly after General Lee's removal to Providence Hospital. It is feared by them that there has been a hemorrhage of the brain.

PURCHASES SITE FOR NEGRO COLLEGE

WORCESTER, April 28.—Deeds have passed making the Rev. J. H. Humphrey possessor of nearly 100 acres of land on Burncoat street, between Clinton lane and Clark street.

The Rev. J. H. Humphrey announced last Fall that he intended to build an institute for the instruction of negroes, and that it will resemble Livingston College at Salisbury, N. C., when finished.

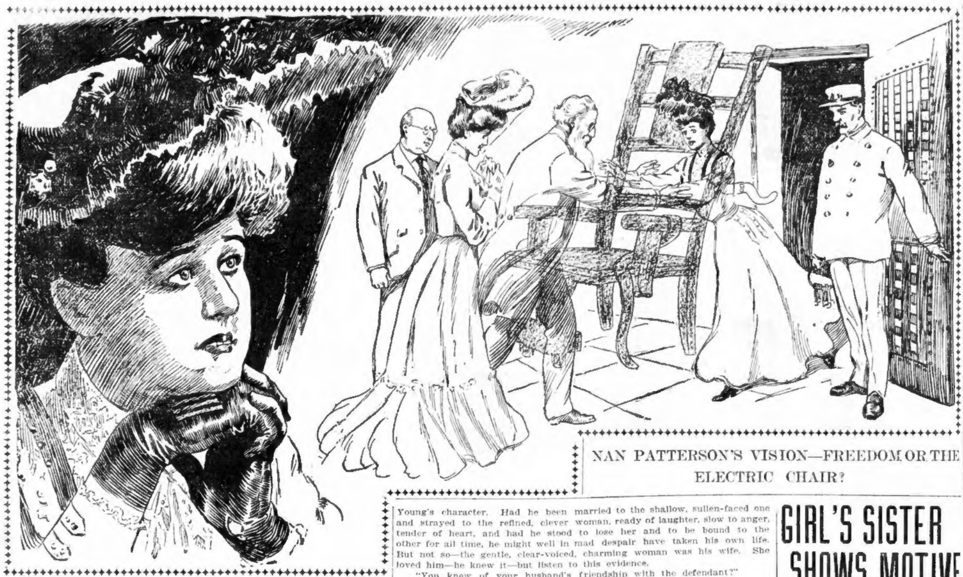
CLARA MORRIS SAYS GREED OF MONEY CAUSED YOUNG'S DEATH

AND SHE COMPARES THE WIDOW OF THE DEAD BOOKMAKER WITH NAN PATTERSON



NAN PATTERSON'S VISION—FREEDOM OR THE ELECTRIC CHAIR?

Noted Actress Wonders How He Could Have Forsaken the True, Self-Respecting Woman for the Typical Chorus Girl.

By Clara Morris.

A COURT convened for the most awful duty imaginable—the trial of a woman for her life; yet, if we except the rising of the spectators at the entrance of the judge, not a touch of dignity, not a trace of solemnity, not a ray of sentiment, to cloak the deadly commonplace of the surroundings, or to tone the "chipper" air of court attendants.

Even before the arrival of the accused I felt myself burning with anger over the manner and the comments of the crowd of sensation seekers. How very imperfect is our veneer of civilization and refinement after all. True, the might of the law has mercifully forbidden bull and bear baiting—even, I believe, rat baiting—but prisoner baiting, especially as practiced by the gentler (?) sex, is still permitted.

If any one of these hungry-eyed girls or women were called upon to fill the witness chair—oh! oh! their feelings would be too sensitive, their refinement too inate—they could never, never, bear the ordeal, the shame of such publicity. Yet here they are, refinement and all, adding to the misery of those other women, innocent or guilty, who are forced by circumstances and the command of the law to occupy that stool of repentance, the witness chair.

"Great Wave of Pity Rose."

But suddenly my temper cooled—an officer caught my eye and gave a slight nod toward a rear door. It opened, and Miss Patterson was coming straight toward me.

As I looked at her heavy, young face, at her pale blue, inconstant eyes, her true chorus girl pompadour with the inevitable downward drag over the left eyebrow, she seemed so weak, so inconsequent a creature to bear such trouble, to face such awful peril, that a great wave of pity rose in my heart, and I longed passionately to free her by the old fairy power of wishing; longed to cast her into the arms of her clean-hearted mother, where she might babble alike of all her sorrow, her penitence, her hopes and promises.

But that was impulse, and she had not yet passed me by when second thought asked sternly, "And what of that other woman?"

Lawyers Are Poor Actors.

Young, gracious, loving, she must henceforth walk in the shadow of a husband's infidelity and death. And then I was watching, listening intently, for the trial was on again. Yes, I watched and saw, but I listened and guessed. Great lawyers are behind the rail. Two were particularly in evidence to-day. Mr. Rand, young, brilliant, stupendously in earnest. Mr. Levy, suave, watchful, alertly adaptable.

The stained-glass judge is, too, a most learned and experienced lawyer; and yet, oh tell it not in Gath!—not one of these gentlemen would be worth his salt on the stage, even in these days of imperfect delivery and mumbled speech. Of course, they are now there in the interest of the public, and as one man remarked to-day, "Well, I suppose they know themselves what they are saying"—so let it pass at that.

Some people argue that "Caesar" Young committed suicide. There was a bit of evidence given today that, were I on the jury, would go far toward convincing me to the contrary. Show me the woman or women that a man loves and I will make a very fair estimate of that man's character.

Charming Woman Was Wife.

Look at these two women and see reflected the two sides of Mr. Young's character. Had he been married to the shallow, sullen-faced one and strayed to the refined, clever woman, ready of laughter, slow to anger, tender of heart, and had he stood to lose her and to be bound to the other for all time, he might well in mad despair have taken his own life. But not so—the gentle, clear-voiced, charming woman was his wife. She loved him—he knew it—but listen to this evidence.

"You knew of your husband's friendship with the defendant?"

"Yes."

"You and your husband lived together?"

"Yes, sir."

"As husband and wife?"

"No, sir, not as husband and wife."

Here was the true woman, who in decent self-respect held herself aloof from him in his wrongdoing, yet—oh, loyal wife!—betrayed him to no one, saved his pride, saved him from gossip and scandal, by this generous pretence of conjugal happiness.

Young Loved His Wife.

Now, "Caesar" Young was the last man in the world to endure such a situation for a great length of time. To the extent of his ability he loved the woman he had married.

Blessings brighten as they take their flight. Unattainable, she became fairer than ever in the days of courtship. He respected her pluck, too, in refusing a polygamous wifehood—in short, he wanted his wife back again and was willing, indeed, to pay the price, to be separated from the defendant.

His wife knew his weakness when in liquor and proposed the wisest possible plan for the recovery of their lost happiness when she suggested a trip abroad.

And so she waited joyfully for his coming at the pier, and he, thinking of regaining her, was far enough from suicidal intention. Yet some hand thrust him out of this world and hurled him, all sodden and unprepared, into the presence of his Maker. Ah, truly, "by their works shall ye know them."

"A Commercial Crime."

I shall never believe this most typical chorus girl guilty of premeditated murder. A tool in other, stronger hands, perhaps; or possibly some wild, fool-hardy scheme of her own to terrify Young into remaining and providing her with more "meal tickets" had gone agley, and the poor little glutton for gold found herself in the toils.

This is a commercial crime. This greed of money is over our whole land; like a great sore it is spreading and eating deeper and deeper, until it has reached even to the hearts of our young girls of the middle and most respected class, creating such a craving for luxury and extravagance that they barter their honor and dignity and give kisses for solid coin; sinking too often to the level of those who smile to order and are gay at the word of command.

So I sat there and pitied and admired the most perfect witness, Mrs. Young—sat and pitied the young-faced old father of this defendant, and pitied—oh, from my heart—the prison-weary, soul-sick prisoner at the bar—Nanette Patterson.

GIRL'S SISTER SHOWS MOTIVE

Q.—And did it truthfully represent the frame of mind Nan was in?

"Now, I object to this course of procedure," said Mr. Levy. The Recorder sustained him.

The letter was gain offered in evidence and again ruled out.

While this evidence was being given Mr. Rand stood between Nan and her sister. Mrs. Smith became a little irritable, chopping out her replies rapidly while her sharp eyes snapped and her mouth turned down in a pout very like her sister's.

Nan was able to see but little of the witness owing to Rand's persistence in keeping between them. This made her nervous and a little uneasy, and she sat shifting her position in repeated efforts to catch her sister's eye, her hands twitching and her expression one of extreme annoyance.

Refuses to Answer.

Q.—I am going to ask you certain questions concerning your movements on June 8, 1904, which you refused to answer when you pleaded to the indictment for conspiracy. You refused then to answer on the ground that it would tend to incriminate you. If you are willing now, I will move to have the indictment quashed. Will you answer?

Mrs. Smith said she could not say until she had consulted her lawyer. Limberger, her lawyer, was not in court and Mr. Rand sent for him. After Mr. Limberger's arrival Mr. Rand said to Mrs. Smith:

"Here is your counsel—now what is your decision?" Were you in New York June 8, 1904?"

"I refuse to answer," said Mrs. Smith.

"On what ground?"

Mrs. Smith looked bewildered.

Recorder Goff said to the witness:

"You may refuse to answer only on certain grounds, and only because it may tend to convict you of a crime, or may tend to degrade you. You must say on which grounds you refuse to answer."

"Well, because it would tend to incriminate me, your honor," she said.

"If I quash the indictment you are no longer in danger," said Mr. Rand.

"I object," said Mr. Levy.

Yesterday Rand put Mrs. J. Morgan Smith on the stand and drew from her the information that Nan Randolph Patterson "was the woman scorned." "Caesar" Young had promised to divorce his wife and marry her. He did not keep his word.

The inevitable friend came and told Nan Patterson that Young was only trifling with her, and thereafter she was "perturbed, hysterical, wild, frantic," so that Mrs. Smith was constrained to write to Young and tell him that unless he "did the right thing" she would not "answer for the consequences."

SISTERS QUARREL.

A quarrel between Nan Patterson and her sister, Mrs. Morgan Smith, resulted from the testimony given yesterday by the latter. The two women met in the corridor of the women's section of the Tombs Prison and Nan's face was flushed with anger. She said:

"I knew that you would say something to hurt me when you took the stand. You should not have testified that I was hysterical. I felt before you went on that you would do this."

"I couldn't help it," protested Julia. "Rand made me testify and made me say what I did."

The masterly Rand had taken the defence completely by surprise, and, at a time when they believed his case was practically in, had "sprung the mine" beneath their feet.

All this came in the hour of Levy's triumph. After long argument the recorder had declined to admit in evidence the alleged "conspiracy" letter which Mrs. Smith wrote to Young.

But Rand held another weapon in reserve. While the defence smiled and rested on its laurels, the resourceful prosecutor was circling around their flank. With a grim smile he called Mrs. Julia Patterson Smith to the stand.

Deprived of the right to send the letter to the jury, he called the writer of the letter to the stand, and proved the writing and the sending of the missive. By ingenious questioning and inuendo he got before the jury practically everything of a damaging character that the letter contains, and crowned this structure with "Caesar" Young's alleged promise to marry Nan Patterson and its subsequent repudiation.

Nan Confident as Ever.

Nan Patterson appeared in court today as carefully gowned as ever, and apparently as confident. She either has not realized the importance of the motive established yesterday, or her counsel have succeeded in minimizing the peril to her from this motive. The usual great crowd was present when court opened.

In the event of a defence being offered by the attorneys for Nan Patterson, it is stated definitely that Mrs. Fannie Shapiros, who says she saw Young with the revolver in his hand just a moment before she heard the shot, will be the principal witness.

John Millin, Young's racing partner, the devoted friend of Mrs. Young, told of the repeated attempts that were made to break off the relations between Young and the Patterson girl; and Rand, after a desperate fight, worked into the case a letter that Nan Patterson wrote to one Leslie Coggins at the height of her affair with Young that is couched in most endearing terms.

And it is such a frivolous little note. What a contrast it drew between Nan Patterson, free and light-hearted, and Nan Patterson, cornered, her life in the balance. It read:

> Dearest:
> Was afraid you had forgotten all about your little girl. I am feeling fine and dandy to-night, sweetheart. Have been up all day long. I am going home to-morrow about 2 o'clock. What do you think of that? Isn't that great? Gee, I'm so glad, I can't wait for morning to come. Y. is coming up in the morning, I think. He was here all this morning. I bet I'll have more to tell you than you have me. Will ring you up from my room to-morrow night if you will send me another note to-night and say where you'll be at a certain time.
> I am going to give a party to a few of the nurses, who have been more than good to me, and I wish you could run up for a few minutes, but maybe it will be better to wait until I leave this blankety blank place. What do you think, dear? You send me a real long note, because they do help to cheer me up. Please send this back in your note, as I really think it best. Be a good boy and do as "mother" says. All my love and kisses. CRY BABY.
> If you should walk on the other side of the street I could see you from my little window, but don't say I told you so.

Mrs. J. Morgan Smith was called to the witness stand at 3:40 o'clock. She is slight and frail, pleasant-faced and sweet-voiced, but if she looks timid and shrinking the impression is at once dispelled by the business-like manner in which she conducts herself.

Q.—Do you know a man named Matt Trimble, who lives in Washington? A.—Yes.

Q.—Was there anything said by your sister about Matt Trimble on the night of May 2? A.—No.

Q.—Did she say anything about her marriage? A.—No.

Mr. Rand asked how Nan acted.

"She was nervous and distressed," said Mrs. Smith finally.

"Did you know the cause of her nervousness?"

"She seemed to be laboring under a nervous strain and appeared to be excited. She spoke quickly."

"Did you know the cause?"

"Yes, but I didn't question her."

"And what was her condition when you went to the Hotel Navarre next day?"

"She was hysterical and crying. A perturbed condition."

"She was almost frantic?" queried Rand, using one of the words from the forbidden letter.

"That is a strong word to use," replied Mrs. Smith guardedly.

"But wasn't she frantic?"

"Yes."

"Did she tell you anything about Mr. Young?"

"She said," replied the witness, "that she had expected to marry Mr. Young, but that the marriage had been postponed, not because he didn't want to marry her, but because he could not help himself."

MR. ROOSEVELT KEEPS WIRE HOT

GLENSWOOD SPRINGS, Colo., April 28.—Secretary Loeb maintains his sphynx-like attitude as to the reason for President Roosevelt cutting short his sport. Whatever the reason, however, it was serious enough to keep the secretary and his office force busy from the time of the President's return to Newcastle until early in the evening. The first indication was a thousand-word disptach to Secretary Taft at Washington, and this was quickly followed by a succession of shorter messages, until the wire, which was looped into the hotel Colorado, was practically given over to the transaction of official business.

Chicago and Denver are the only stops the President will make on his way home.

AFTER 12 YEARS

Postoffice Clerk Eveleth Cured of Catarrh by Father John's Medicine.

I am general delivery clerk in the Lewiston post office, where I have been employed for the past five years. About one year ago, I had a severe attack of grip, which left me with a bad cough. I had always been troubled more or less with nasal catarrh, and it grew worse after my attack of the grip. Several of my friends remarked that I looked as though I was in consumption, and I certainly felt as bad. I got a bottle of Father John's Medicine and it helped me and after taking several bottles, my cough ceased, and I have not been bothered since by either cough or catarrh.

If Father John's can cure a case of catarrh of over twelve years, I am sure it deserves the highest praise.

I have increased in weight over 30 pounds, and have passed two medical examinations for life insurance since your medicine cured me. It gives me great pleasure to add my testimony to the many in favor of your grand medicine. (Signed) Fred B. Eveleth, Jr., Lewiston Post Office, Lewiston, Me.

CARNEGIE GIVES $121,000,000; STILL HAS $4,000,000 INCOME

VAST GIFTS DO NOT IMPAIR HIS FORTUNE

College Authorities Enthusiastic Over $10,000,000 Donation for Retired Professors.

GREAT BOON TO EDUCATION

College presidents and educators have only the highest words of praise for the latest benefaction of Andrew Carnegie, in which he gives the great sum of $10,000,000 to form a fund from which superannuated college professors may be paid suitable pensions.

President Eliot of Harvard says of it: "It is unquestionably a very valuable benefaction to the cause of education."

One of the most remarkable facts about Mr. Carnegie's gift is that, according to financial men, it doesn't make him any poorer than he was. They declare that he has kept his gifts within his income and has still had $4,000,000 annually for himself.

This, notwithstanding the fact that is is estimated that this brings the Carnegie contributions up to about $121,352,000 in the past five years, about $85,000,000 of which he has given since he retired from the steel business four years ago.

As a matter of fact, there are only a few persons who know actually how much Carnegie is worth, but the sums received by him for his steel interests when he accepted bonds of the United States Steel Corporation indicate that he has at least $250,000,000, and Wall street men say that he in reality has a fortune of at least $300,000,000. A large portion of this is in Steel 5 per cent. bonds, while about $100,000,000 is so invested that his annual income is estimated at between $20,000,000 and $25,000,000.

The lower estimate is only $5,000,000 less than his total gifts in four years, while the higher would mean that he has had about $15,000,000 to live on in the past four years. This is believed to be correct.

In stating these facts those who have watched his constant outlay for charity do so, not in an unkindly spirit, but to show how he has succeeded in accomplishing a great deal for others without undermining his own interests.

Some of the Comments.

Here are some of the comments of college presidents upon Mr. Carnegie's gift:

President Schurman of Cornell: This is the wisest thing ever done for higher education in America. It recognizes the professor as the essential factor in the university.

President Hadley of Yale: "It is an exceedingly valuable gift, of whose uses we shall know more in the future than we do now."

President Seelye of Smith: "It will be of incalculable benefit to the colleges. No gift has been made to colleges in general which will prove of such great value."

President Pritchett of Massachusetts Institute of Technology: "I regard Mr. Carnegie's gift as one of the most important and far reaching ever made to education. It will establish upon broad and general lines a system of pensions in a sufficiently large number of American institutions to insure its general adoption as a part of the administration of our higher institutions of learning."

President Harper of the University of Chicago: "This is one of the most significant steps in the interests of higher education in the last twenty-five years. It will give the college professors a position of dignity greater than ever before.

President Faunce of Brown: "Mr. Carnegie's interest in our American colleges is very gratifying. I only hope that Mr. Carnegie's agents will consider whether it might not be well to distribute the available fund among the different institutions whose professors are to derive benefit from it, rather than to hold the lump sum under a board of independent trustees."

President William J. Tucker of Dartmouth said: "I can conceive of a gift like this being administered in such a way that its effect would be for an immense amount of good."

President William D. Gibbs of New Hampshire State College at Durham said: "Mr. Carnegie's idea of helping needy or poorly paid college professors is good in the main, but I am confident his gift will fall far short of fulfilling his expectations."

"Has Solved Problem."

President Henry Lefavour of Simmons College said: "Mr. Carnegie has solved the problem of superannuation in educational matters, and it is only one more evidence of his great public spirit and his deep interest in all that concerns education."

President Carroll D. Wright of Clark College said: "It is an excellent thing, one of the best of the many excellent things I have known him to do."

President William DeWitt Hyde of Bowdoin college said: "It is a most timely and welcome gift and would do a great deal to increase the efficiency and dignity of the office of college professor.

Dr. Pritchett, president of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and Mr. Vanderlip have been selected by Mr. Carnegie to obtain data on the subject, to be presented at the first meeting of the board of trustees, which will take place Nov. 15.

Mr. Carnegie's Letter.

Mr. Carnegie's letter to the trustees is dated April 18, and is in part as follows:

> I have, therefore, transferred to you and your successors, as trustees, $10,000,000 5 per cent. first mortgage bonds of the United States Steel Corporation, the revenue from which is to provide retiring pensions for the teachers of universities, colleges and technical schools in our country, Canada and Newfoundland, under such conditions as you may adopt from time to time.
> Expert calculation shows that the revenue will be ample for the purpose.
> The fund applies to the three classes of institutions named, without regard to race, sex, creed or color. We have, however, to recognize that State and colonial governments, which have established or mainly support universities, colleges or schools, may prefer that their relations shall remain exclusively with the State. I cannot, therefore, presume to include them.
> There is another class which States do not aid, their constitutions in some cases even forbidding it, viz., sectarian institutions. Many of these established long ago were truly sectarian, but to-day are free to all men of all creeds or of none. Only such as are under control of a sect or require trustees (or a majority thereof), officers, faculty or students to belong to any specified sect, or which impose any theological test, are to be excluded.
> I hope this fund may do much for the cause of higher education, and to remove a source of deep and constant anxiety to the poorest paid, and yet one of the highest of all professions.
> Gratefully yours,
> ANDREW CARNEGIE.

The distribution of the Carnegie fund to retired college professors will, according to the conditions laid down, benefit exactly half the New England colleges, sixteen to come under the terms and sixteen to be excluded. Curiously enough a list of the forty-four largest educational institutions of the country shows similar results, twenty-two to benefit and twenty-two apparently excluded. The lists follow:

PRINCIPAL DIES OF FALL FROM HIS BICYCLE

H. Chapin Sawin, principal of the Bigelow School, Newton, who was found unconscious on Commonwealth avenue, Newton, early last evening, died at the Newton City Hospital at 9:20 to-day. Dr. Perkins, who attended him, ascribes the death to a fracture of the skull.

The police say that, as far as they can find, Mr. Sawin was riding his wheel down Commonwealth avenue toward Washington street, and that when he got to the hill he must have lost control and have been thrown to the ground near Chestnut street. When found he was unconscious and remained so until his death to-day.

Mr. Sawin first came to Newton in 1871 to take charge of the Bigelow School. He was about sixty-five years of age. He was a graduate of the State Normal School.

THREE YOUNG FIREBUGS HELD

Before Judge Perrin, in the West Roxbury District Court to-day, three boys, John Burns, sixteen, of No. 85 Keyes street; Thomas P. Dolan, sixteen, of No. 58 Call street, and Michael Clougherty, fifteen, accused of setting fires on Call street and Forest Hill street, were held for the Superior Court in $300 each.

Suspicion first attached to them after a fire in the home of the Rev. R. J. Hawkins, on Sedgwick street. The boys had been seen around just previous to the fire. Young Burns was arrested and confessed, implicating the other boys.

HER HUSBANDS DIE IN SAME QUARRY

RUTLAND, Vt., April 28.—Mrs. William Parry is mourning the death of her second husband, who, like the first, was killed in a slate quarry at Granville. Parry fell from a ledge in the quarry, and died almost instantly. He leaves four children and his widow. Mrs. Parry's first husband was killed by a blast in the same quarry where Parry was killed.

DEAD BANKER HIS FATHER, NOT AN UNCLE

Harry E. Hubbard of Chicago has laid claim to the entire estate of Henry C. Hubbard of Winchester, by whose death the young man learned for the first time that the banker was his father instead of his uncle, as he had been brought up to believe. Young Hubbard's mother, who is now Mrs. Fancher of Chicago, was divorced from Henry C. Hubbard at Alfred, Me., twenty-three years ago.

Mr. Hubbard married again. The claim has been set up by attorneys for young Hubbard that the second marriage was illegal and an appeal against the appointment of Mrs. Hubbard as executrix of the estate has been filed at East Cambridge before the Supreme Court.

"We do not know that Henry C. Hubbard was ever legally married to the woman who claims to be his widow and who now lives in Winchester, and so we are giving her a chance to prove it. If she cannot prove it, of course the estate goes to the son. If she is Hubbard's legal widow she will get her share, one-third. Hubbard's relatives never knew that he was married a second time, and so we are simply investigating."

This is the explanation of the petition given by Mr. Coulson of the firm of Knox, Coulson & Murphy of Lawrence, attorney for young Hubbard, to a BOSTON AMERICAN reporter to-day of the appeal filed in Cambridge.

The lawyers are investigating the reported facts of the marriage of Hubbard and his second wife at Wolfeboro, N. H.

The second Mrs. Hubbard is now living on the estate at Winchester, where her husband died. To a reporter Mrs. Hubbard said that she was the legal wife of Henry C. Hubbard, that she intended to fight the attacks made by the young man from Chicago who she did not know was the son of her husband until the facts had been brought out at the death of Henry C. Hubbard.

BIGELOW WAS EXPOSED BY HIS BROTHER

Defaulting Milwaukee Bank President Confessed When Asked About Big Draft.

AMOUNT NOW $3,277,000

MILWAUKEE, Wis., April 28.—It now develops that Frank G. Bigelow, the president of the First National Bank, who defaulted with $3,277,000 of the bank's and other funds, was accidentally exposed at a directors' meeting by his brother, William Bigelow, who is vice-president of the bank.

William Bigelow received a telegram about a $50,000 draft on a New York bank, and thinking it a mistake, because the New York house already held $200,000 of the bank's notes, had the books examined. The examination showed they had been tampered with, and at a directors' meeting that afternoon Mr. Bigelow demanded an explanation of the officers present, not having the slightest idea who the defaulter was. When his brother arose and calmly announced that he had gotten about $1,450,000 of the bank's funds Mr. Bigelow almost collapsed.

Up to date Bigelow's defalcations amount to $3,277,000, of which $1,975,000 is wholly or in part secured. Of the remaining amount $1,110,000 is a secondary liability on notes and bills discounted. The notes were in connection with the financing of the National Electric Company, and are on that company, S. S. Watkins, its former president and the Gand Rapids Edison Company. The remaining amount of the defalcation, $192,000, represents unsecured loans, of which $100,000 was taken from the Broadhead estate, of which Bigelow was executor.

Bigelow's estate has been declared bankrupt and placed with the Wisconsin Loan and Trust Company as receiver. A trustee will later be appointed. Bigelow's assets are estimated to be $1,849,800, against which there is a homestead exemption of $5,000.

At the Shuman Corner the New Model Young Men's Sack Suits at Twenty-two Dollars have won remarkable favor. They are made up principally in hard finished worsteds, with concave shoulders and hand-felled collars, to insure close fitting.

Both the single and double breasted styles are cut long, with vent in back, and have broader lapels than last season, with the long roll.

These suits are calculated to please the most fastidious dressers. They are correct in every way and have been thoroughly and carefully put together to resist long and constant service. It should be borne in mind that nothing is allowed to enter into the weave but strictly long staple pure wool.

NOTE—All garments manufactured by A. Shuman & Co. bear their full name and designation on the etiquette attached either to the collar or the inside pocket, as follows:

JEWESS STIRS RUSSIAN TROOPS TO MUTINY

Three Soldiers Shot and 15 Sentenced for Life as Result of Uprising.

SUWALKI SCENE OF RIOT

WARSAW, April 28.—Advices received from Suwalki state that while a regiment of reservists were marching through the streets of that town to a train which was to convey them to the Far East they broke ranks when opposite a Catholic church and entered the edifice. While they were praying and singing one of the soldiers jumped up on a chair and began to urge his comrades to refuse to go to the war. The priests thereupon intervened and induced the soldiers to depart.

After arriving at the railway station a young Jewess distributed Socialist literature among the troops, twenty of whom smashed their rifles and refused to enter the train. The police then attempted to arrest the Jewess, when a crowd gathered around her to protect her from the officers. A riot was imminent, when some one shouted, "Now throw the bomb!"

The soldiers and police immediately fled in all directions. Before they recovered from the scare the Jewess had made her escape. The soldiers then tried to mutiny, and as a result three of them were shot and fifteen sentenced to be imprisoned for life.

TWO WEDDINGS AT LEOMINSTER

Special to the Boston American.

LEOMINSTER, April 28.—Two very pretty home weddings were celebrated here when Judge J. Ward Healey married Miss Helen J. Hill, and Clyde O. Holland was wed to Miss Lulu Gertrude Wheeler.

Miss Hill is the daughter of Postmaster and Mrs. T. A. Hill, at whose home the wedding took pace, and is one of the popular belles of the town. The knot was tied by the Rev. F. J. Gould, pastor of the Unitarian Church. Upon their return from a brief wedding trip Judge and Mrs. Healey will live here. The groom is the justice of the District Court.

The nuptials of Mr. Holland and Miss Wheeler were celebrated at the home of Mr. and Mrs. G. F. Wheeler on Bartlett street, the Rev. Lawrence Phelps, pastor of the Congregational Church, officiating. The bride was handsomely gowned in white silk and was unattended. The ring service was used, and the ceremony took place under a floral bell.

HOUSE ROBBED, SERVANT GIRL DISAPPEARS

NO SIGN OF MISSING GIRL

The home of Mrs. Frederick Mead and Mrs. Frederick Mead, Jr., at 328 Ashmont street, Dorchester, was robbed of about $1,000 worth of goods. Expensive gowns, skirts and underwear, and silver toilet accessories were among the articles taken.

A servant girl, who had been employed at the home for about four weeks, giving the name of Mary Connors and her residence as Cambridge street, disappeared at the same time.

Mr. Mead, Jr., said to-day that the girl was seen boarding an Adams street car bound for the Dudley street terminal at Wrentham street. She was stylishly dressed. At the Dudley street terminal all trace of her was lost.

The silver toilet articles bear the monogram "K. G. M."

Mr. Mead said to a BOSTON AMERICAN reporter to-day:

"All the folks were out of the house when the girl left. The girl apparently hastily caught up what things she could lay her hand on, dressed up in one of the suits, and left. Several valuable diamond pins and brooches were left behind.

"The girl was tall, about five feet seven and one-half inches, with black hair, blue eyes and a very pale complexion. She had one gold tooth in the front of her mouth."

THREW TEAM TO AVOID COLLISION

Driver William Kehoe of the ladder truck from the Andrews Square fire house deliberately threw his three horses at the corner of West Broadway and D streets, South Boston, to-day, and prevented collision with a crowded electric car.

The ladder truck was on the way to a fire at No. 243 West Third street. When Kehoe was confronted by the car in the narrow space there was no opportunity to turn the big truck. Throwing his whole weight on the reins, Kehoe turned the horses sharply, and the the animals piled in a heap.

The firemen were thrown from the truck, but all escaped serious injury.

2,000 IN FIRE PANIC IN HALL AT LAWRENCE

FIREMEN AVERT DANGER

Special to the Boston American.

LAWRENCE, April 28.—Two thousand people, panic-stricken at the sight of a blaze in the main room o the City Hall building, struggled to escape during the progress of the annual Patriots' Tea, given by the Sisters of Charity for the benefit of the Orphans' Asylum last night, and serious injuries were averted only by the prompt action of two firemen who were on duty in the hall and the coolness of several men present.

The hall was crowded, with women and children in the majority. Suddenly the decorations on the east balcony caught fire in some mysterious manner and the blaze flared up to the ceiling.

Instantly pandemonium broke loose. Women fainted, others screamed, children cried, and the mass of humanity rushed for the doors of the building.

W. F. Finneane and W. W. Schmidt, firemen from Engine Company No. 3, who were detailed at the hall for the evening, shouted to the people that there was no danger and promptly tore down the decorations. With the hand chemicals which they had they soon had the flames extinguished. In a short time quiet was restored, and it found that no one was seriously injured. A number of the women who fainted were taken to their homes in carriages.

LAWRENCE, April 28.—Mourned as dead by his parents for several years, Private and Seaman John Connell, of Uncle Sam's army and navy, has returned and is with his family at No. 302 Prospect street to-day.

His father and mother thought him lying in a grave in the Philippines, for he had been ambushed by Filipinos while an army scout and left insensible beside the body of his comrade, who was beheaded. Connell was terribly wounded on the head, but skilful surgery and careful nursing saved him. He had not been able to write his parents, and did not know he was reported dead. When his army enlistment expired he shipped in the United States Navy.

Last and Most Marvellous of Verne's Stories

As yet the publishers who have had exclusive control of the late Jules Verne's literary output since his earliest success have announced no posthumous volume. It is doubtful if any complete, or nearly complete, manuscript exists, but the novelist's literary executors have just now permitted the publication of a most interesting and characteristic sketch, showing the general design of a tale which Verne was planning at the time of his death. The last message of the dying novelist to his readers will be given in the BOSTON SUNDAY AMERICAN.

"HAD TO TELL SOMEBODY" ABOUT SECRET MARRIAG

MRS. BACIGALUPO, WHO WAS SECRETLY WED.

Jamaica Plain Girl Wed Son of Prominent Brewer Two Months Ago in Providence.

If Miss Alma Meyer of No. 47 Boylston street, Jamaica Plain, hadn't "just had to tell somebody" about her marriage to Humbert Bacigalupo, son of John I. Bacigalupo, of the Massachusetts Breweries Company, it might have been a secret yet. But after two months the young woman could keep quiet no longer, and told her mother.

Mrs. Jennie G. Meyer was much astonished at her daughter's confession and sought the elder Mr. Bacigalupo. The young people were summoned before the two parents and the whole of their little romance was related.

They had realized that there would be parental objection because Miss Meyer was only seventeen years of age, and young Humbert has two years yet before he reaches voting age, so they made a quiet little journey to Providence. There the ceremony was performed, and they returned home with ideas of keeping it quiet for a time.

In order to have the affair done properly the parents insisted on a second ceremony.

After leaving school Miss Meyer went to work in a dentist's office. This did not meet with the approval of young Mr. Bacigalupo, who allowed that they had better be married. After they were married he continued his studies at a business college, where his father insists that he shall remain until his graduation.

To a BOSTON AMERICAN reporter Mrs. Bacigalupo told the story of how it came about:

"We were married, but I don't see why it should interest anybody but ourselves.

"I met Humbert while I was attending the West Roxbury High School. Love at first sight, you might call it.

"Two months ago we decided to get married. We were afraid to in Boston, because we thought our parents might find out about it and stop it.

"Now it is all over. We are happy and we are forgiven. I am glad we did it, anyhow."

Mrs. Bacigalupo's father is dead. He was at one time a prominent member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

PINCHED THE WRONG CHEEK

Mr. Feintzheimer, Newly Come From Odessa, Thought he Had Found Cousin's Wife.

"Marco Feintzheimer," called the clerk in Judge Adams's Municipal Court session.

Feintzheimer, the defendant, came to the stand and bellowed out a string of explosive Russian that sounded like the roster of the Praebojentsky Guards. He is a basso profundo, and the roof warped at the volume of sound he belched forth.

"Sh-sh-sh!" said several court officers at once. And they called an interpreter.

Marco boomed forth at length to the interpreter, ending with a step forward and a wicked right swing toward the interpretorial eye. The interpreter ducked and said:

"He Pinch My Cheek."

"He landed from Odessa Sunday. He has a cousin, Max Palter, who came here from Odessa years ago. He found a Max Palter at No. 78 Chambers street and said to him, 'Are you Max Palter from Odessa?' Palter says 'Yes.' Then Feintzheimer says, 'You are my cousin.' 'No, I ain't,' says Palter, and hits Feintzheimer in the eye. That's his story and he wants Palter punished."

"Mrs. Max Palter," called the clerk.

Mrs. Max, a pretty young wife, said in English:

"This man comes to the house when my husband is out and says, 'Does Max Palter from Odessa live here?'

"I says, 'Yes.'

"'I'm his cousin,' says he, and I ask him in.

"'So you're my Cousin Max's wife,' says he, and he pinch me on the cheek and Max comes in, and——"

Russian Explosion.

Here Feintzheimer's basso profundo interrupted with a few more names from the Praebojentsky Guards. Marco had been listening uneasily and feared things were going against him.

"Sh-sh-sh!" said the officers, and the basso profundo died away.

"And Max comes in," continued Mrs. Max, "and he saw what this man did, and he isn't any cousin of Max's and never was, and it was a mistake of his, and Max put him out quick."

"Discharged," said Judge Adams, and Max and Mrs. Max walked away triumphantly, while the injured basso profundo boomed some more Praebojentskys to himself all the way down the corridors.

HARTWELL PRAISES HUB AND CAMBRIDGE

NEW YORK, April 28.—Boston and Cambridge, with New York, Baltimore, Chicago and Rochester most nearly approach the ideas which the National Municipal League is putting forward for the government of cities, according to a report read by Dr. Edward W. Hartwell, chairman of the league's committee on accounting and statistics. Dr. Hartwell reviewed the work done by the society during its ten years of existence.

KNOWLES OUT OF EQUITABLE

Was Discharged by Alexander, Whom He Criticized and by Whom He Was Suspended

NEW YORK, April 28.—H. H. Knowles has been formally discharged from the Equitable Life Assurance Society by President Alexander. Mr. Knowles was superintendent of agencies until two weeks ago, when he was suspended by President Alexander.

Mr. Knowles was brought into the Equitable controversy during the meeting of agents in this city ten days ago. At that time he gave out an interview criticising President Alexander and Second Vice-President Tarbell and subsequently made charges against the latter in the newspapers.

Mr. Knowles in his reply said: "How the mighty have fallen under the baneful influence of Tarbellism! I want to assure you that this effort to stifle me will be as futile as your previous ones. If I was as unmindful of the interests of the great body of policy holders of the society as the Alexander-Tarbell faction have proven themselves to be by wasteful expenditures of policy holders' funds in the shape of legal fees and other expenditures, including packed conventions of managers, in trying to becloud the real issue, I should not hesitate to bring suit against the Equitable Life for damages."

William Nelson Cromwell, who in public print has been connected with policyholders' receivership proceedings against the Equitable, has issued this statement:

"I consider a receivership, even if there were grounds for it, as destructive of the interest of policyholders and stockholders alike; a public calamity and a deep wound to our national prestige abroad and at home.

"Consequently my firm has not accepted and will not accept a retainer involving such a step. The pending questions will not find a solution in such a course. There never was a cause in which forbearance and concession were more imperatively a public duty as well as to the common interest.

HEAR CRIES FOR HELP AS SHIP SINKS

Mrs. Mitchell, Wife of Whiton's Captain, Tells of Horror in Collision Off Orleans.

EXHAUSTED MEN DROWN

Suffering from the terrible experience through which she passed when the ill-fated schooner Harry L. Whiton was sunk by the schooner Charles A. Campbell off Orleans Tuesday night, Mrs. Florence Mitchell, wife of Captain Walter Mitchell of the Whiton, is recuperating on the schooner Glenullen at Boston & Albany dock, East Boston. Her husband and their pretty little son, Lawrence, are with her.

The three surviving members of the crew, Mate L. L. Mitchell, Steward Sidney P. Strout and Seaman John R. Emery, have left for their homes in Harrington, Me.

Captain and Mrs. Mitchell are still suffering from the nervous shock sustained on that fateful evening, when out of the stillness of the night came the crash of the collision which sent their staunch little craft to the bottom and two sailors to death.

Mrs. Mitchell received a BOSTON AMERICAN reporter in the cozy little cabin of the Glenullen and gave the following story of her experience:

By Mrs. Florence Mitchell.

The cries of poor Spiers and Anderson, who went to the bottom with the ship, and the wild shouts of the mate are still ringing in my ears. I will never forget them as long as I live. It all seems like a terrible dream. It was awful.

Little Larry and I were lying down in the cabin when the crash came. Captain Mitchell was on deck. My first thought was of the baby. Catching him in my arms, I sprang out of the berth and rushed up the companionway.

On deck all was dark, the only lights we could see being those on the Campbell. The crash dazed me for the time being, and my husband caught me up with the child and lowered me into the small boat which was trailing astern.

All the time the baby, who had been awakened by the crash, was crying, and it was then that I began to realize the peril of our position.

Heard Cries For Help.

Spiers and Anderson, exhausted by their labor at the pumps to keep the vessel afloat for the two days previous, had just been relieved, and were asleep in the forecastle. When the crash came the mate tried to arouse them, but failed. They were probably penned in by the timbers. Later we heard their cries for help, but were unable to aid them, as the hold was rapidly filling and we had barely time to escape in the boat when the Whiton went down.

We were in the open boat about a half an hour before the crew of the Campbell picked us up, but that half hour seemed like a week to me. The suspense I suffered that night will haunt me for the rest of my life. Although this is not my first experience on the water, I think it will be my last. I expect to leave for home to-day, but my husband will remain here until he finds something to do. We have lost everything. The vessel was owned by my husband and was worth about $7,000. She was not insured.

Doctor Brigham Says

MANY PHYSICIANS PRESCRIBE

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

The wonderful power of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound over the diseases of womankind is not because it is a stimulant, not because it is a palliative, but simply because it is the most wonderful tonic and reconstructor ever discovered to act directly upon the generative organs, positively curing disease and restoring health and vigor.

Marvelous cures are reported from all parts of the country by women who have been cured, trained nurses who have witnessed cures and physicians who have recognized the virtue of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and are fair enough to give credit where it is due.

If physicians dared to be frank and open, hundreds of them would acknowledge that they constantly prescribe Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in severe cases of female ills, as they know by experience it can be relied upon to effect a cure. The following letter proves it.

Dr. S. C. Brigham, of 4 Brigham Park, Fitchburg, Mass., writes:

"It gives me great pleasure to say that I have found Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound very efficacious, and often prescribe it in my practice for female difficulties.

"My oldest daughter found it very beneficial for uterine trouble some time ago, and my youngest daughter is now taking it for a female weakness, and is surely gaining in health and strength.

"I freely advocate it as a most reliable specific in all diseases to which women are subject, and give it honest endorsement."

Women who are troubled with painful or irregular menstruation, bloating (or flatulence), leucorrhœa, falling, inflammation or ulceration of the uterus, ovarian troubles, that bearing-down feeling, dizziness, faintness, indigestion, nervous prostration or the blues, should take immediate action to ward off the serious consequences, and be restored to perfect health and strength by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and then write to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass., for further free advice. No living person has had the benefit of a wider experience in treating female ills. She has guided thousands to health. Every suffering woman should ask for and follow her advice if she wants to be strong and well.

MAINE LAKES CALL ANGLERS

A large number of Boston fishermen got out their fishing rods and wiped the winter's dust off them when they received telegrams to-day from Maine that the ice has gone out of Grand Lake, Washington county. This lake has some of the best land locked salmon fishing in Maine, and many Boston people go there every spring.

Several are already at the lakes, among them Dr. Heber Bishop, who has been doing great fishing at Clearwater Pond, near Farmington.

GAS TRUST IS ANSWERED IN PLAIN WORDS

Public Franchise League Clearly Presents the Issues Involved.

SHOWS FALSE REASONING

The advertisements of the Boston Gas Trust aggregating many thousands of words, giving specious reasons why the trust should be allowed to water its stock at the expense of the people of Massachusetts, have been answered by the Public Franchise League to-day, in a clear and succinct statement.

The Public Franchise League has "boiled down" all the actual issues involved, which the trust has tried to cloud, eliminating the questions that have been dragged in to befog the view, and its statement is concise and convincing. It follows:

The Massachusetts Gas Trust has wasted a substantial amount of the gas consumers' money in its extensive advertisements of "alleged facts" concerning the proposed consolidation. Many of the alleged facts are irrelevant, many of the arguments are specious. The public will not be misled, nor can its attention be diverted from the great issue involved. That issue is simple, and the essential facts bearing upon it are undisputed:

First—Eight Boston gas companies have in the aggregate a capital stock of $9,309,600, and it is said $4,815,000 of debts.

Issued $50,000,000 Stock.

Second—Financiers acquired the $9,309,600 stock and $4,815,000 debts of these companies and also the coke property at Everett, which has been a financial failure, combined these in an unincorporated trust, and promptly issued against them and listed upon the Stock Exchange $50,000,000 of Massachusetts Gas Company stock.

Third—In order to maintain and increase the selling price of this $50,000,000 of the trust's stock, these financiers induced the Legislature in 1903 to depart from the wise and established policy of the Commonwealth prohibiting stock watering of public service corporations, and pass a bill under which the Gas Trust claims the right to capitalize the Boston Consolidated Gas Company at $20,609,989.99.

Fourth—The average capital of the Cambridge, Lowell, Springfield, Worcester, and Fall River companies, upon which dividends and interest are paid, is at the rate of less than $2 per 1,000 feet of gas sold, 6 per cent. dividends upon which means a capital charge of only 12 cents per thousand sold. The capital of $20,609,989.99 demanded for the Boston Consolidated Gas Company would be at the rate of nearly $6 per 1,000 feet sold, 6 per cent. dividends upon which means a capital charge of 36 cents per 1,000 sold.

Means Higher Price.

Fifth—If 6 per cent. dividend is paid upon capital, every additional $1,000,000 of capital adds for every Boston gas consumer two cents per 1,000 feet used. Every $5,000,000 of capital means ten cents per 1,000 feet in the price of gas.

Sixth—The excess of the proposed capitalization ($20,609,989.99) over the aggregate capital stock and debts ($14,124,600) of the present companies represents largely past earnings. This was money paid in by the consumer, and should not be capitalized. While this increase belongs legally to the company, the consumer should not be compelled to pay dividends upon it.

Seventh—A public service corporation is in duty bound to share its benefits with the public in return for the monopoly, the use of the streets and other privileges. The corporation either should not tax the consumer for the purpose of extending its plant, or, if it does so, this contribution by the consumer should not be made the basis of a further stock issue to increase and perpetuate the consumer's burdens.

Due to Misunderstanding.

Eighth—The passage of the act of 1903 was due in part to a misunderstanding by the Legislature as to the effect of its provisions. No consolidation has as yet been had under it. The Legislature has still full power to prevent the threatened injury to the public without affecting any vested right.

Ninth—When street railways consolidate all stock watering is prohibited. When the electric companies of Boston consolidated, stock watering was prohibited. Why should the special privilege of watering stock be granted to the Boston Consolidated Gas Company?

LABOR WAR THREATENED IN CHICAGO

3,000 Teamsters on Strike To-day and 25,000 May Be Out by Monday.

EMPLOYERS HAVE $250,000

CHICAGO, April 28.—Chicago is facing to-day the most dangerous labor disturbance since the Debs strike eleven years ago, if not the most serious in its history. The business of the city, already greatly disturbed, may soon be completely paralyzed so far as it is dependent upon teaming by the greatest teamsters' strike on record.

Gathering way speedily, the strike has spread in flashes. By next Monday morning, if not sooner, all of the 25,000 union drivers may be involved. The employers expect to apply to the United States courts for a blanket injunction, as the State court order protecting the business of Montgomery Ward & Co. lacks the force that is needed.

"Strike Breaker" Farley Expected.

"Strike Breaker" Farley is expected from New York to-day or to-morrow. The unions declare that the strike got beyond their control. The leading merchants and business men realize their impotency to check its spread.

Lurking behind the teamsters' contest is the shadow of a greater war, one in which organized capital and organized labor may clash for supremacy in Chicago. Only the conservatism of some of the labor leaders, it is believed, will avert the lining up of the combined forces of the workmen against their employers in all branches of industry.

Nearly 3,000 drivers are on strike this morning. This number is directly involved, but it is certain that fully 10,000 more are affected. With others being called out every hour the total number may be more than doubled by to-night.

The big department stores on State street are at the mercy of the strikers. The big retail stores already involved are Marshall Field & Co., Carson, Pirie, Scott & Co., Mandel Brothers, A. M. Rothschild & Co., Siegel Cooper & Co., and The Boston.

Express Business Stopped.

The express business practically is at a standstill. The seven big companies are left with a few scattering drivers to man the 500 wagons used daily to carry on the immense express traffic of the city.

At daylight 350 wagons and teams were in service to haul the goods the striking teamsters have refused to touch.

The sum of $250,000 has been contributed by nearly 100 business men of Chicago. This sum, constantly growing, represents the financial war chest which the employers have set aside to defeat the teamsters.

To Show Good Faith.

Owing to the recent general clamor made against medicines containing large quantities of alcohol, Doctor Pierce has decided to prove to the public that his "Favorite Prescription" for the diseases and weaknesses of women is not a patent medicine in the full acceptance of that term. Hereafter the ingredients of his "Favorite Prescription" will be printed on the wrapper of every bottle that leaves the laboratory.

YOU CAN TRUST

A medicine that has been deservedly popular for over a third of a century—that has cured thousands of women of those diseases peculiar to the sex—and in which the manufacturer has sufficient confidence in the sterling merit of the medicine to give to the public a full knowledge of its ingredients.

EVERY WOMAN

Who takes this "Favorite Prescription" of Dr. Pierce, will know just what she is taking.

This medicine contains the non-alcoholic extracts of the following native plants:

LADY'S SLIPPER (Cypripedium Pubescens)
BLACK COHOSH (Cimicifuga Racemosa)
UNICORN ROOT (Chamælirium Luteum)
BLUE COHOSH (Caulophyllum Thalictroides)
GOLDEN SEAL (Hydrastis Canadensis)

NATURE'S OWN CURE

For those distressing complaints so common to women.

During an extended practice, in which Dr. Pierce made the diseases of women a specialty, he found that a rare combination of American medicinal plants would almost invariably cure all the debilitating wastes and drains, all the aches and pains incident to womanhood. Consequently he put up this favorite remedy in a form that could be easily procured at every drug store.

DR. PIERCE'S FAVORITE PRESCRIPTION

Keeps women looking young by keeping disease away from those marvelously delicate organs which distinguish the female sex. It quiets the nerves, and stops those bearing-down sensations. It fits the wife for the task of child-bearing, making the period of gestation one of comfort, shortening labor and making it almost painless. It fortifies the whole system, so that recovery after confinement is quick, and there are no dangerous after-effects. The babe of the woman who takes "Favorite Prescription" is sure to be healthier than the babe of the mother who does not take it.

Umpire—O'Loughlin.

Jake Stahl's Senators will try to get revenge on the Champs this afternoon in the third game in the present series, if the weather holds favorable to baseball. Stahl believes that his team was beaten only by luck yesterday, and that with things breaking right they will have little trouble defeating the home team.

Stahl thinks that Case Patten is about as good a twirler as he has on his staff to vanquish the Champs. A short time ago, when the Senators captured three straight from the locals in the Capital City, Patten, the clever south-paw, won an eleven-inning contest from Collins's pets.

Patten Showing Grand Form.

This time Patten stands ready to repeat the performances. He has been showing grand form all season, and says the Champs's eyes will have to be wide open to solve his curves.

Jimmy Collins was in a happier frame of mind to-day as the result of the conquest of the Senators.

"It looks as though things were starting our way now," said the Boston captain. "All we need is a few victories to give us confidence, and then we will go after the leaders for blood.

"I am pleased with the way McGovern is panning out, and I don't know what we would have done in the present crisis without him behind the bat. I think he will turn out to be a good man with the stick, as well as a fine general behind the willow."

Gibson Will Probably Pitch.

Gibson will probably do the pitching for the Bostons to-day. He was slated to go into the box yesterday, but at the last moment Collins changed his plans and sent Tannehill to work in his stead.

Gibson says he is in better form than when he pitched during the series with the Athletics, and will lead the Champs to victory if only given the opportunity.

Winter is in good shape and ready to go after the Senators if ordered to the firing line. This little twirler has been doing the best work on the staff this season, and the fans can rest assured that if he is summoned to the front he will give the "Stahlers" a great run for their money.

NOTES OF THE GAME.

That's something like it.

It was a great day for furs and mittens. If we hadn't won it would have seemed colder.

It was an anxious moment in the ninth with the third corner occupied.

That home run crack of Kip Selbach's was worth the price of admission.

Wolfe had a short session. His successor did a little better. What might have happened to the former had he stayed is hard to tell.

Collins objected strenuously to Silk calling a balk on Tannehill, and Jimmy never kicks without reason.

One ball came back from the bleachers, as the arm of the law was alert.

Perry Sessions left to join his old team, St. Paul. Another year he may be the goods.

Parent waits for the ball. His best play is meeting it, and he rarely slips up.

YANKEE DOODLE BOYS WIN GAME

The first theatrical ball game of the season was played at the Locust street grounds, when George M. Cohan's Yankee Doodle Boys and the Florodoras met. The game was rather one-sided, for the Yankee Doodle Boys had it all their own way and won by a score of 29 to 2.

Sam Harris, under whose direction "Little Johnny Jones" is being presented, played third base and stopped some hot ones. To-day George M. Cohan's Yankee Doodle Boys will play the "Woodland" nine.

AL SELBACH, OF THE CHAMPS

This is a picture of Al Selbach. Although the Bostons have not won many games since the season opened Selbach has been doing about the best stick work of any of them, and Collins is fortunate in having such a good man to play centre field while Chick Stahl is laid up. At present Selbach leads the entire team in batting.

Al Selbach was the hero of the game between the Washingtons and the Champs yesterday at the Huntington avenue grounds. In the first inning he knocked a homer over the left field fence, a feat which has only been accomplished by two other players, Pat Dougherty of the Highlanders and Charley Hickman of Detroit.

Taken Expressly for the Boston American.

RANDALL FORCED TO REST

The Harvard nine had no trouble in disposing of the team from Bates on Soldiers' Field by the score of 12 to 1. The Crimson nine played a good game in the field behind the steady and effective pitching of Castle and Taylor, who allowed only three hits. In addition to this the Cambridge men hit the ball hard for a total of fourteen safe drives, five of which Matthews got.

The Bates men were weak in the field and at the bat except in one inning, the fifth, when they scored an earned run on a single and a triple.

Captain Randall turned his ankle in sliding to first base, and had to retire from the game. He will be in harness again in a few days, however. McCarty took the captain's place on first and played a fine game. Bradbury and Spencer were tried in the Harvard outfield, and played well in the field.

The Harvard crew had another general shakeup. Farley was put at stroke in the varsity again after an absence of a single day, Captain Filley going back to six. George went to seven from three. Carl Lawson was shifted back to the port side of the boat, rowing at five. Meier's side of the boat was changed. Instead of five, he rowed four. Tappan returned to three. Shepard stayed at two, while Corbett went from seven to bow.

This was a complete shift from yesterday's order. Captain Filley is evidently trying out the men in all possible orders. The orders of the boats were:

Varsity—Stroke, Farley; seven, George; six, Filley; five, Lawson; four, Meier; three, Tappan; two, Shepard; bow, Corbett.

Second—Stroke, Pleasanton; seven, Flint; six, Bacon; five, Montgomery; four, McLeod; three, Lilly; two, Gill; bow, Burchard.

TENNEYITES MEET DUFFY'S QUAKERS

Special to the Boston American.

PHILADELPHIA, April 28.—With the kind permission of Old Sol, the Boston National and Quaker teams will clash at the local National League grounds this afternoon. Rain knocked all plans on the head yesterday.

The teams are anxious to get at each other and decide the question of supremacy, which was left unsolved at the first meeting here Wednesday afternoon, when the rival nines clashed nine innings without breaking their tie.

Wilhelm Carded to Pitch.

Irve Wilhelm is carded to do the pitching for the visitors, while Duffy feels inclined to work Duggleby, who is in rare form. With these two veterans serving up the pellets, a good, lively contest should be the result.

Fred Tenney and his Beaneaters did nothing yesterday, but figure out how far up in the standing they should finish this season. All the boys feel certain that they will make a better showing than last season, now that they have a stronger corps of pitchers.

Duffy Has Confidence.

Duffy is taking a common sense view of the race. He knows that the Giants have a fast team, but he honestly believes that if everything breaks right, and his boys improve as the season wears on, as he confidently hopes, he will give the New Yorkers a hard run for the flag.

Fred Tenney, who is a great favorite in this town, is receiving congratulations from his many friends here, because of the big fight his team is making to get out of the second division. If the Tenneyites can win a couple of games here, they may pass the Quakers in the race.

Champ Haverhill Team to Have Big Opening To-day

Special to the Boston American.

HAVERHILL, April 28.—The New England League baseball season will open in this city to-day. The feature of the afternoon will be the raising of the blue pennant, emblematic of the championship won by the Haverhill club last season.

The exercises as planned will be on an elaborate scale. Early in the afternoon the players of both the Haverhill and Lynn teams will parade the city in carriages, passing through the principal streets. Besides the players there will be the league officials, the city government and the owners of the club and a brass band.

SUNDAY BASEBALL FIGHT IN COURT

BROOKLYN, April 28.—District Attorney Clarke has declared war against Sunday baseball in Kings County. A complaint based upon sworn statements has been prepared and will be presented to a magistrate who will be asked for warrants for Charles H. Ebbets, president of the Brooklyn Baseball Club, and some of the players and other participants in last Sunday's game at Washington Park.

President Ebbets said yesterday: "There will be a game on Sunday if the police do not stop it. I have not been served with any papers. We think we have a right to play Sunday ball and we will do so if possible. The cases against us were dismissed by the Court of Special Sessions and we rely on that decision this year."

Justice Gaynor's decision in the habeas corpus proceedings of last year, when the arrests of Dillon and Poole were reviewed by him, was quoted by Assistant District Attorney Courtney. The real facts, he said, had not been properly presented to the court. Had they been, he declared, the players would have been held.

'TWIN' KNOCKS OUT COCHRANE

PORTLAND, Me., April 28.—Mike (Twin) Sullivan of Cambridge knocked out Tommy Cochrane of Philadelphia with a terrific right solar plexus punch in the fourth round of their scheduled twelve-round bout at the Eastern Athletic Club. Cochrane substituted for Larry Connolly, who was unable to appear.

Walter Egan of Harvard came strong for second honors, finishing with 77, and a total of 156.

Jimmy Walsh Will Meet Bowker Abroad in October

Jimmy Walsh, of Newton, and Joey Bowker, of England, have been matched for the world's bantamweight championship, and will meet in October at the National Sporting Club of London.

Eddie Keevin, who is Walsh's manager, received word from Manager Bettison, of the English club, offering him a substantial purse for such a bout, and Keevin immediately accepted.

The articles call for a bout at 118 pounds. Bettison figures that Pinky Evans, who will meet Bowker on May 29, Derby day, will not be formidable. That is why the contest with Walsh has been arranged six months ahead.

At 118 pounds Walsh will be at his best. Jimmy has been very anxious to get a match with Bowker, who is regarded as the best bantam England has produced.

Walsh will not sail for the other side for some time. In the meantime Jimmy will try to dispose of Owen Moran and other ambitious bantams.

WHAT'S THE FUNNIEST THING BABY EVER SAID

SCORES of letters tell how much mothers enjoy this contest. Other scores tell how much the children like it. Here's one letter:

"Two weeks ago I sent in one of my little boy's bright sayings. When it was published he felt very proud, but his little sister, Bernice (three years old) was consumed with envy.

"'Well, I sink it's mean,' said she. 'I wants to be adbertised in de BOSTON AME-WICAN, too.'

FACE ALL RUSTY

A few weeks ago I had been annoyed over a certain matter. My little five-year-old boy Ambler said:

"Please, mamma, don't look like that—your face is all rusty."

MRS. E. A. KEARNEY.

No. 53 Lonsdale street, Dorchester.

HAD A COW

A three-year-old-boy where I spent my last Summer's vacation was much attached to me. His characteristic speeches showed him to be much of a little "farmer." Among my friends was one who had a fine team. One day little Jeanie's papa said to him:

"I am sorry, baby, but I don't think you have much of a chance with Miss King, because Mr. —— has a horse and takes her to ride.

The baby quickly answered:

"Well, I don't care. I am going to have a cow."

M. D. KING.

No. 38 Green street, Jamaica Plain.

WANTED A CHANGE

My little sister Rose, aged six, came to me and said:

"Why is it that mamma can't never be papa, and that papa can't never be mamma?"

"Why do you want to know?" I asked.

"Oh, simply because I'm tired of calling the same one by the same name."

JOSEPH PERREAULT.

FEETS BAREHEADED

My little cousin, Frankie Specht, when two years of age, looked out of the window, and seeing some children barefooted for the first time, ran to his mamma, saying:

"Oh, mamma! mamma! Can Frankie go out of doors and wear his feets bareheaded?"

IDA MAY SPECHT.

COME DOWN, GAS

Asking me for a match one day, May, aged two and one-half, drawing her high chair up under the gas jet, tried every way to reach it. Losing patience at last, she exclaimed:

"Come down gas, come down."

MRS. C. M. WILSON.

No. 20 Dundee street.

NONE TO FORGIVE

A few days ago I was out walking with my little four-year-old daughter Merriam, and we passed an orchard with the sign "no trespassing" on a tree. Explanation had to follow. That night when saying the Lord's Prayer she stopped short before "and forgive us our trespasses, etc.," and said:

"God, I don't have to say that. I never saw your garden so couldn't steal anything, but don't lead me in the temptation."

MRS. G. WYCKOFF.

No. 703 Columbia road, Dorchester.

MIGHT PRICK CONSCIENCE

Loretto, just five, was playing with Agnes. I told them not to touch anything on the bureau; but, after awhile, Agnes took a brooch from the cushion, and tried to fasten it in her dress. Loretto watched her closely for a few minutes and then said gravely:

"Don't stick it in too far, Aggie, 'cause God might make it prick your conscience."

MRS. D. MURPHY.

No 37 Sixth street, South Boston.

SOAP GREECE?

Harold, four years old, said to his mother one day:

"Mamma, what do they call Greeks Greeks for?"

She said: "Why, because they were born in Greece."

Harold then asked:

"What kind of grease? Soap grease?"

EDITH MAE SAMPSON.

REFERRED HER TO POP

I went in for the fifth time to settle Philip, aged two and one-half, in his bed. I said:

"I don't know what to say to you."

Philip said:

"Ask Pop."

MRS. OTTO P. BARON.

WHY, IN THE GARDEN

Father and mother were talking about planting the other evening, and father said:

"Where shall we plant the beans this year?"

My sister Catherine, aged four, said:

"Well, in the garden; where d've suppose?"

CATHERINE'S SISTER.

I gave a doughnut to my little boy John, three and a half years old, and told him to give half to his brother, which he did not do, so I said to him:

"John, did you eat the whole of that doughnut?" He said:

"No, mamma, I eat all round de hole and I left de hole for my brudder."

MRS. ELLEN BURKE.

No. 57 Regent street, Roxbury.

LIKED JUICY WATER

My little cousin Marion, aged three, once asked my mother for a "jink" of water. While the water was running she said:

"I like water that's juicy better than the kind in lumps."

ROSELLA HAMBRO.

No. 70 Clarkson street, Dorchester.

SCHOOL IN TOO SOON

My little boy, when four years old, was late for school one day.

"Well, Harry," said the teacher, "why are you late?"

"Well," he answered, "you tuck school in before I come."

WIND EGGS UP

One day last fall my little girl, Hazel, three years old, was in the pantry with me watching me make salad dressing. I broke the eggs into a bowl, and she then asked me:

"Mamma, are you going to wind 'em up?"

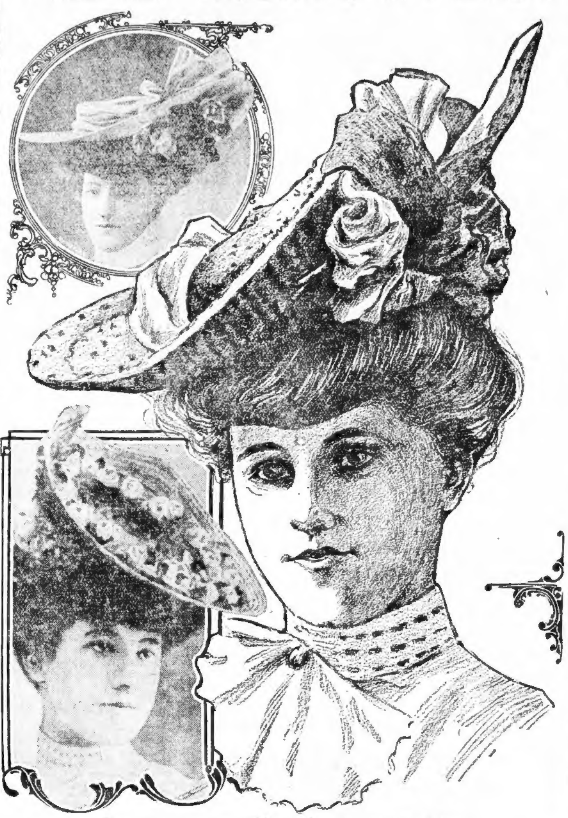
THREE NEW CONFECTIONS IN MILLINERY



These hats are the latest Parisian creations, just received in Boston.

MILLINERY is a theme which never grows tiresome to feminine ears, nor loses interest in feminine eyes.

Poor Eve missed one of the greatest joys of life in being deprived of the chance to visit a hat shop on opening day. The hats this years are unusual, it must be confessed, but whenever was there a new hat which on some pretty woman would be simply enchanting?

The hat which this season sets fairly and squarely and conventionally on the head is so unique as to command attention and create comment.

Most of them perk, and perch at the most absurdly hazardous angles, and the marvel is that they are able to keep their equilibrium at all.

The hat shown in the small picture at the bottom is a confection in pale blue and pink. The shape is of pale blue satin straw, round in front, turning saucily at the side and back.

A wreath of tiny pink roses and green leaves encircles the crown, and where the brim turns highest and most abruptly there is a massing of pink roses and blue forget-me-nots, resting against the hair.

The hat in the large picture is a stunning model for morning wear with shirt waists.

It is of rough yellow straw with a twist of opalescent taffeta, changing from yellow to green and then to pink. A strap of the straw holds the silk in place at the left side, and a stray quill gives a fetching effect.

For afternoon wear and dress occasions this hat in Louis XVI. style is sure to be effective.

It is a modified picture style, made of lavender crin, rolled high at the side where the space underneath is filled in with a cluster of deep red roses, the combination of lavender and deep red being one of the daring conceits of the season.

Ribbon in one of the fascinating weaves of the day, and in the color of the hat is used for the bow.

In pure white with pink or yellow roses this model would be equally attractive.

Not Luck, but Unselfishness, Brought Together Miss Rose Harriet Pastor and J. G. Phelps Stokes

HUNDREDS of young working girls in cigar shops are wondering to-day why Fate is so partial as to select one of their number for the heroine of a fairy story and to leave the others to a life of toil and poverty. They call it "luck."

To the tales of Mrs. Southworth and Laura Jean Libbey they liken the story of Miss Rose Pastor, who began as a cigar girl and has ended as the fiancee of a millionaire and an American aristocrat.

But there is no favoritism of Fate, and the only fairy godmother in the charming romance is—Unselfishness.

It was not Destiny which took Miss Pastor out of the cigar factory—it was her overwhelming desire to help her fellow toilers and to find a larger sphere of usefulness in the world.

So constantly her thoughts revolved about this subject, so absolutely devoid of self-seeking purpose was her ambition, that all the great spirits of good who hover about this earth seeking the unselfish came to her assistance and helped to further her wishes.

Miss Pastor did not want to extricate herself from the toil of the cigar factory merely because she desired more money for fine apparel or greater ease in life. She wanted a wider field of usefulness. She wanted power to help others to better views and happier conditions.

It was this quality in her, not her mere physical charm, which won her the love of her wealthy fiance.

This is wherein the story differs from the fictions we find in the Family Story Paper—those fictions which turn the heads of hundreds of poor girls and make them anxious for display, that they may attract the eye of some rich young man and leap from poverty to wealth.

And Miss Pastor's romance differs, too, from those we read now and then in the daily papers—romances where sons of wealth do wed beautiful and ignorant daughters of poverty, only to divorce them a few years later or to break their hearts with refined cruelties.

Miss Pastor was deprived of the advantages of school after the age of twelve, but she read, thought and listened herself into culture. Any working girl who has the deep, strong determination to obtain education can do so by listening attentively to the conversation of those who are better instructed than herself, by reading good books and by watching every opportunity for information and profiting by it.

Even her education and information, self-obtained, this young girl valued only as it enabled her to give greater happiness to others.

Therefore when she met her fate it was in the mental and spiritual realms they became affinities, not merely on the physical plane of youthful attraction, like the dime novel heroine, and because of this important fact the marriage will not end in divorce or disaster, as so many others do where a man and woman in different social positions and of varying creeds are infatuated.

Had her lover been penniless and unknown and still the same noble worker in the vineyard of God, Miss Pastor would have given him her heart and hand as freely.

It is this unworldly, unmercenary and unselfish quality in her nature which has brought her the happiness she so deserves.

Let no one of her old companions or successors in the ranks of labor imagine it is a partial act of Fate which has selected her for this role. It is the simple working of a great just law of cause and effect.

THE BELLS OF YOUTH

THE Bells of Youth are ringing in the gateways of the South;
The bannerets of green are now unfurled;
Spring has risen with a laugh, a wild rose in her mouth,
And is singing, singing, singing thro' the world.

The Bells of Youth are ringing in all the silent places,
The primrose and the celandine are out;
Children run a-laughing with joy upon their faces,
The west wind follows with a shout.

The Bells of Youth are ringing from the forests to the mountains,
From the meadows to the moorlands, hark their ringing!
Ten thousand thousand splashing rills and fern-dappled fountains
Are flinging wide the Song of Youth, and onward flowing, singing!

The Bells of Youth are ringing in the gateways of the South;
The bannerets of green are now unfurled;
Spring has risen with a laugh, a wild rose in her mouth,
And is singing, singing, singing thro' the world.

SCARLET LIES

"I SAY it is worth trying for," she said doggedly, "since you have got into this absurd state of mind that you must part with your secret. Why, Stephen, his mother must think as I do. Why has she never spoken all these years? Why has she remained silent ever since your father's death? Because she knows that her son is not fit to take up the position that by a strange freak of fate belongs to him."

Stephen shook his head with an unutterably weary movement.

"Whatever inexplicable reason influenced Mrs. Lang to conceal the fact that she was in reality Mrs. Holland and to keep the knowledge of his inheritance from her son during all these years," he said with a dreary and hopeless sort of determination in his voice, "it can make no difference to the fact that I swore to the man who was a father to me on his deathbed that I would find these people and restore them to their rightful place in the world, and that I have been for I have found them and I have bidden the truth from them."

False to My Oath,

Judith gave vent to a frankly impatient exclamation.

"Your conscience has awakened in the most extraordinary manner since you have lost Mary Armstrong," she said scornfully.

"Don't taunt me," the unhappy man rejoined, almost humbly. "I would have done anything on earth to keep Mary. That was my great sin."

"And suppose I restore Mary to you and find a way to compromise with George Lang," she asked, "will you give up this mad scheme, and live your life like a reasonable man?"

"Nothing can make any difference now," he said. "My mind is made up." But his voice faltered, and she caught at the note of hesitation.

"Be a man, Stephen!" she cried. "You are acting like a fool or a baby. At least I hope you are convinced of the disinterestedness of my motives. I am willing, eager to do everything for you. I shall get nothing in return."

"I cannot look into your heart, Judith," he said, sombrely. "I do not understand you in the least."

"That is because you will not believe that your happiness is more to me than anything in the world. It is a poor love, Stephen, that only labors on in the hope of a reward. Some day you will perhaps understand me. At any rate," she added, changing her tone, "you have given me your word to do nothing for a week. When you hold Mary in your arms again you will think differently, and you will forget all about the poor peri at the gates of paradise."

"Don't, Judith!"

said Stephen, sternly. "Don't talk like that."

"And now give me George Lang's address," she said briskly.

"Judith, what will you say to him? How can you possibly explain your visit to him? He is a good-natured giant, a great, fair-haired, blue-eyed man, with the heart of a child. He has not the faintest ghost of a suspicion. He is fond of me; he looks upon me as his benefactor. Oh, if he only knew!"

"Leave him to me," retorted the woman soothingly. "I shall be very careful. I have always told you that a woman's wit is the thing to manage an affair of this sort."

"But there is nothing to manage. I have made up my mind."

Nevertheless, he gave her the address—gave it reluctantly, and yet with a strange underlying feeling of feverish excitement. He mistrusted her; he even feared her; and yet in a way he believed in her. She was strong; she was determined. Despite everything, she had that mysterious kinship with him that the sharing of a secret must always give. It almost seemed to him that Judith Mort might work a miracle to render unnecessary this thing that he had determined to do.

CHAPTER LVI.

Bella's Secret.

IN the living room of the lodging house in Church street, George Lang and Bella, the beautiful Queen of the Ring, were alone, and in both their faces was an expression of abject and hopeless despair.

This morning had seen the end of everything. Revelle, in a howling rage, had dismissed everybody. He was going into Winter quarters with the animals, and as few men as could properly look after them.

He had informed the troupe, amid a volley of abuse, that he was ruined, and spoke as if it were entirely their fault. He had not paid them their last week's salaries, and, as he expressively told them, they "might whistle for it," for he hadn't a penny to throw away on such a pack of fools, who might call themselves circus artists, but would be far more fittingly employed in sweeping the streets.

Revelle left town, followed, it must be admitted, by nothing but hearty execrations from his little band, who had certainly worked loyally for him, and whom he had shamefully left in the lurch.

Only George Lang did not abuse; but, then, it was not in the Lion King's nature to do such an uncharitable thing. And he was content about one thing, and that was that after a long and exhausting battle he had prevented Revelle from taking Little Dorrit away with him, and the child was left in the care of Mrs. Lang, who was under contract to deliver her up in the Spring.

"But we'll get that contract cancelled before then," said the Lion King to himself, with grim determination.

And now George and Bella were discussing ways and means with much gravity and earnestness.

"After all, it can only be for a little while," George Lang was saying, in his hearty, hopeful way. "I'm bound to get another show soon. Why, there was that Mr. Selwyn who looked me up the other day; he was an agent. I shall write to him. He wanted me for the halls."

"But Georgie," exclaimed Bella, "you forget with Revelle. You're the only one of us who's got one. You can't break that."

Your Contract

"It is broken," answered the Lion King, with singular abruptness.

"Broken!" cried the girl. "Georgie, what can you mean? Isn't he bound to pay you a certain salary all the year round, whether you perform or not?"

"No," answered the Lion King firmly. "Bella, I may as well tell you the truth. Revelle and I have quarrelled; we have parted forever. It was about Little Dorrit. I was determined that she shouldn't go with him to be taught any more of those back-breaking tricks, and neglecting her schooling, and all that sort of thing. I told her she was to stay with us; and yesterday I happened to come across Revelle, who had got hold of her alone in the drill hall, and was scolding her for all he was worth.

"She was frightened to death, and I turned on him, and, I dare say, I raved; and he turned on me and reminded me I was his servant, and I said I wouldn't be any more, and I didn't want any of his dirty money, and would he release me from my contract. I think he was only too pleased, for money's really scarce with him; but I got Little Dorrit. I told him that if he insisted on keeping her I should inform the S. P. C. C., the School Board and all the authorities I could think of."

"Oh, Georgie," cried Bella, with glittering eyes, "that was splendid of you! But you've left yourself with nothing. And what about your lions?"

"It's hard parting with the beauties," he replied regretfully. "But, after all, the kid's a human being, and Revelle would have ended by making her break her neck. I'm sure of it. But I'll get a show soon. Don't you trouble, old girl!

"Bella," George Lang went on, his voice growing wonderfully soft and tender, "this doesn't seem the right time to speak, I know. But, after all, we're in trouble. Let's share it; it will make it easier to bear. I've never said anything before, although you must know

I Love You.

I've always thought I'd wait until I was rich and famous. It doesn't look much like my ever being that, so I'm speaking now. Marry me, Bella, and let's fight side by side. Say you've always understood; say I haven't been wrong in thinking that you care a little. Bella, we'll look after you, mother and I. I know she's longing to welcome you as her daughter. Speak to me, Bella, my darling! Say you'll be my wife!"

At the first words of this simple and ardent declaration the girl had buried her face in her hands. Now George Lang possessed himself of her two slender, strong, white hands, and gently and firmly pulled them away. Her face was drenched with tears, and convulsed with some unutterable misery.

"Oh, Georgie," she moaned, "you mustn't speak like that! I can't—I mustn't listen!"

"Why, Bella," the Lion King asked, with indiscribable tenderness in his voice—"why mustn't you listen? Surely there is nothing new to you in the thought. Have we not often talked of it, dreamed of the day when we should be happy together?"

"Oh, yes," the girl answered, flushing painfully; "while I saw no chance of it every coming to anything I know I loved to talk of it, to dream of it. But I was a fool; I was mad! Georgie, I cannot marry you because I am not free."

"Not free!" he exclaimed incredulously. "Do you mean that there is another man? Oh, Bella, you cannot mean that! I have known you for two years; I have seen all your actions. There cannot be another man."

"There is another man," she said sorrowfully, "and he is my husband."

"Your husband!" George Lang's voice was absolutely blank with horrified amazement. "Bella, you are married! And you never told us!"

"Oh, I was so ashamed!" the girl cried bitterly. "I will tell you everything, Georgie. I was married long ago—a year before I joined Revelle. He was an actor at the time. I had hardly been his wife three months when I discovered that he was an incurable drunkard. I stood it for a year, and then I left him. Things had been going from bad to worse. He spent every penny I earned. He was never in a fit state to work himself. Since then he has been shut up several times. He becomes a raving maniac for the time. Just the other day I heard from him. He is in some garret somewhere in Boston, and he is starving. I sent him all I had left at Christmas. I always sent him most of my money. I would do anything for him but live with him—that I cannot. I have not the strength. Do you wonder, Georgie," she concluded miserably, "that I kept this terrible story to myself?"

The Lion King seemed absolutely crushed. The dream of his life had been shattered by her disclosure—a little home, Bella his wife, children playing at his knee. The light of hope went out in a great and cruel darkness; but his first thought was for her.

"My dear," he murmured, "my poor Bella!"

She had hidden her face in her hands again, and was crying silently.

After a pause the man asked, in a strange, dull voice:

"Bella, do you love me?"

She lifted her head; her splendid eyes were proud and very tender.

"Yes, Georgie. You have taught me what a good man's love can be. And it will always be the most beautiful thing in my life. And you have taught me other things, too. And I do hope you are not angry with me."

"Of course not!" he murmured. "My poor, poor Bella!"

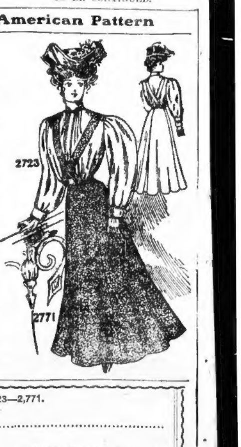
A Smart Suit for Spring Wear



Nos. 2,723-2,771.—At the present time, when the demand for shirt-waist suits is so general, those who prefer an odd skirt and waist will be pleased with the pattern shown above, which, through the medium of shoulder-straps, combines the advantages of separate waist and skirt with the effect of a complete suit. The fulness at the neck is disposed of in three backward-turning tucks on each side, or gathered. The collar, shirt cuff, and front-closing box-plait are stitched in tailor fashion. The five-gored skirt has an inverted plait in the back, and can be made in round or short-round length. A smart street toilette will result, if brown cheviot is used for the skirt and brown and white shepherd plaid for the waist. The quantity of material required for the medium size is 6½ yards 44 inches wide.

ADDRESS...

GOMPERS Talks on Labor at HARVARD

Tells Students Why President Eliot's Argument, "Invasion of Personal Liberty," Is Wrong.

Samuel Gompers, President of the American Federation of Labor, in an address before a large number of students at the Harvard Union, took occasion to express himself on the well-known attitude of President Eliot on the labor question.

"Solicitude for the fanciful," said Mr. Gompers, "occupies the time of a great many people to-day. Some men live under conditions exhilarating both mentally and spiritually, and are really oblivious to their real surroundings.

"One thing that is essential to happiness is absolute lack of want. This is what the labor unions are trying to bring about.

"'The invasion of personal liberty,' is the argument put forth by some men of prominence in opposing labor unions. The same argument has been used by the enemies of organized labor from time immemorial. As a matter of fact, labor unions are founded on precisely the same plan as every stable government.

Individual Liberty Is Wrong.

"The idea of individual liberty is erroneous. Not many years ago our country was torn asunder and our people went through four bitter years of civil war because eleven States believed that they should have individual liberty.

"The individual cannot assert his personal and individual liberty. Organization is the only means by which one can achieve actual liberty."

The subject of Mr. Gompers's address was "The Potency of Organized Labor for the Common Weal." He was well received by the students and at the close of his address answered a number of questions propounded by his hearers. During the course of his address he said:

"Revolutions in Russia are caused by the same conditions as make trades unions in the United States. But the American plan is different from the Russian, in that Americans shun violence and resort to peaceable methods in attaining their desires.

Workmen Want More.

"American workmen have made up their minds to have a greater share in the productivity of the country. The American workman who earns $1 a day believes that he should have ten cents more. The American workman who earns $2.50 believes that he should have twenty-five cents more.

"The American capitalist who controls $8,000 or $10,000 worth of labor is planning for $100,000 or $200,000 more. The American capitalist who controls $100,000,000 or $200,000,000 does not disguise the fact that he wants the earth.

"But everybody seems to be bitter against the poor devil who wants a little more than he is getting. This is the attitude that organized labor seeks to eliminate."

Unions Are For Peace.

"Organization is the only solution of the labor problem. Lawyers have their unions. They call them bar associations. When a lawyer departs from the ordinances of his bar association he is called a 'pettifogger' and a 'shyster.'

"Doctors have their unions. They call them county medical associations. When a doctor transgresses the rules of his organization he is called a 'quack.' Preachers have their unions, and when one of their number departs from the beliefs of his fellows he is called a 'heretic.' Why should not the laborer have his union?

"The attitude of trades unions makes for peace, not war. They have their grievances, and wish them corrected. They are always ready to arbitrate any difficulty if they believe that they will be treated fairly."

4 MEN HURT IN NORTH END ROW

As a result of a brawl between Poles and Italians at No. 7 Morton street, North End, four men are at the Relief Hospital suffering from knife wounds. Two are charged with assault with intent to kill and five more are locked up at the Hanover street station charged with drunkenness. One of the men stabbed, Anthony Trosby, will probably die.

The others injured are: Michael Green, No. 9 Morton street; Harry Vitchie, No. 15 Morton street, and Antonio Mandraze, No. 7 Battery street.

The trouble started at the home of Trosby, a Pole. He was entertaining Green and several other fellow countrymen when Vitchie and Mandraze, Italians, entered and started a fight, which it took a squad of twenty patrolmen to stop.

FIRE DESTROYS LENOX PALACE

LENOX, April 28.—"Brookhurst," one of the finest Summer homes in the Berkshires, owned by Alfred R. Shattuck, former president of the American Automobile Association, and occupied for the last two years by William A. Read of New York, was destroyed by fire. The damage will reach $50,000 with insurance of $30,000.

Valuable paintings and furniture owned by Mr. Shattuck were saved by the firemen. Only a few days ago thousands of dollars worth of Mr. Read's paintings and other goods were removed from the house. The building stands on an estate of 100 acres, and was a fine three story building.

SMALLPOX IN MAINE CITIES

LEWISTON, Me., April 28.—There are six smallpox patients in the pesthouse here and physicians in both Lewiston and Auburn report many mild cases. As many persons in both cities have been exposed to the disease it is feared that many more cases will delevop.

THINK SINGLE TAX A REMEDY

Single taxation as a remedy for unequal taxation was discussed at the Economic Club dinner. Former Mayor Josiah Quincy presided.

Professor E. R. A. Seligman of Columbia University said: "The present tax system is unworkable, impracticable and unjust. Change is clearly necessary."

Secretary Osborne Howes of the Boston Board of Fire Underwriters said: "Enormous advantage would result by limiting taxation entirely to real estate, licenses and franchises."

Mr. Quincy read a letter in which Charles Francis Adams said: "The present system I regard as in every respect bad."

President C. B. Fillebrown of the Massachusetts Single Tax League declared that capitalization for land taxes were gradually exempting owners from taxation.

The "Gentleman" That Stole a Million and a Half

He May Suggest a Thought or Two

A highly respectable business gentleman was Frank G. Bigelow, head of the First National Bank of Milwaukee.

He was president of the bank, and formerly president of the American Bankers' Association.

He was a director in fifteen different corporations.

Incidentally, he was the executor for numerous estates, with quite a collection of the far-famed "widows and orphans" dependent on his honor.

Can't you imagine some of the conversations of this highly respectable "gentleman"?

Don't you know how indignant he would have been if anybody had mentioned municipal ownership to him, or national ownership?

Can't you hear him saying, "Why, you would rob the widows and orphans; you are nothing but a wild anarchist"?

The respectable Mr. Bigelow actually HAS robbed the widows and orphans, also the bank depositors that trusted him, and everybody within reach. He has been nothing but a common thief—Heaven knows how many there are like him that keep out of the penitentiary because they do the thing more neatly, or because their speculations with other people's money turn out more fortunately.

It would be interesting to know the things that this respectable gentleman has said about labor unions, for instance.

Can't you imagine him slapping his honorable chest and talking of vested interests and "government by the respectable superior class"?

Poor, dead Sam Parks, an ignorant man, with no good start in life, was far from being an angel. But, at least, he didn't rob any women or children. He didn't swindle his fellow workmen—as this respectable thief has swindled his fellow bankers. Parks didn't cheat the people that trusted HIM.

The worst thing charged against Parks was that he got money from the people he was fighting, the more or less rascally building concerns that were paying him to hurt their rivals or bribing him in some other direction.

Yet when Parks and his dark, dismal doings were exposed, there was a general demand from eminent respectabilities that labor unions should promptly disband, that workers should all hide their heads for shame and talk no more of unionism.

Will banks and corporations now disband? Will THEY hide their heads as they see this bank president-director-thief caught stealing from women and children?

And what about the other thieves, the grain and stock brokers, that took his money—KNOWING IT MUST BE STOLEN—or at least not caring whether it was stolen or not?

Will they write "PECCAVI" across their front doors and go to Canada to keep out of jail?

Not at all. Eminent respectabilities will continue to rob the public at large and the individual women and children that trust them.

Eminently respectable stock brokers, that would vote to jail a pawnbroker if he bought a stolen watch, will take all the stolen money that is offered to them.

Eminently respectable scoundrelism will go on its way as cheerfully as ever—and it will howl in pained amazement if next year, or year after next, another Sam Parks, some ONE walking delegate out of tens of thousands, shall be caught extracting a thousand dollars in a left-handed fashion.

The public has a pretty short memory, but it ought to remember this interesting bank president-thief, this contemptible swindler of dependent women and children, the next time some sanctimonious Coal Trust gentleman, or other wholesale pirate, lays down the theory that only the "rich, respectable, high-class business gentleman" is fit to be trusted with the people's welfare.

And don't forget the bank president-thief Bigelow either when some "anarchist" talks about a government savings bank, and all the respectabilities of the Bigelow kind yell "socialism" and "anarchy," and declare that the Government musn't interfere with the right of the "upper class" to rob the other classes.

The Professor Knows It All

A Professor in Columbia College has been kind enough to explain to the people exactly why they must not think of owning their own street cars, gas works and other public utilities.

This is a cruel blow to municipal ownership, and it is with diffidence and almost despair that we attempt to revive the issue which Professor Goodnow has laid low with one stroke of his political economy syllabus.

Mere journalists, men whose calling compels them to keep in touch with the world, to go hither and yon about the city's streets and to study what the people are talking about and what they want, perhaps should not venture to enter into discussion with a College Professor, who spends his days in a library stored with the best thoughts of the world's sages from Aeschylus to Andrew Carnegie and S. C. T. Dodd.

And yet we venture to suggest to the Professor that his points are not at all well taken. The business of running a street railway is not so exceedingly complicated, although the business of "milking" it by the methods of high finance does indeed require some technical skill and a low order of honesty. But the city can hire the railroad manager and fire the railroad financier—greatly to the good of the road and the public travelling thereon.

The excellent Professor further complains that a city would be inclined to pay better wages to the men employed in the actual operation of the road, and smaller wages to the higher officials. Be it so! We accept that criticism with philosophy. If the roads were run merely to accommodate the public and to pay interest on their ACTUAL cost—water barred—the men could and would be paid better.

1. When the girls are by themselves they can eat pork and beans, corned beef and cabbage, frankfurters and sauerkraut; in fact, anything on the bill of fare.

2. But when a gentleman takes them out to dinner their appetites are so dainty that they merely toy with a charlotte russe or some delicate little trifle of that sort.

London Charmed by Display of Whistlers

By Henri Pene Du Bois

HENRI PENE Du BOIS, art critic, is now making a tour of Europe as the Boston American's Special Art Commissioner. He will visit the leading galleries and art collections of the world, and his comments, criticisms and descriptions will appear in this column from time to time. This is the first of this notable series of articles from the pen of Mr. Du Bois.

LONDON, April 12.—A great crowd was at the New Gallery yesterday. Joseph Pennell was happy. Everybody knows now that the work of Whistler is not to be seen again ever as well as it is there. Mr. Baring and Mr. de Rothschild say so, and they are different art collectors.

Mr. Baring likes delicate and little objects which may be handled easily; miniatures, gold boxes, snuff bottles, netsukes. Mr. de Rothschild wants sumptuous furniture: consoles, sofas, tables.

Mr. Baring said to Mr. de Rothschild: "Say what you will, that butterfly . . . !" And they returned my bow, one of them uncovering his pink baldness, the other a gray leonine mane. In the light that the glass windows filtered, a great crowd tramped, hurried, stopped in a sort of murmur wherein one caught at times a word, a greeting, a laugh.

The manners were ceremonious in spite of all that, the politeness was particular, the talks were discreet. I thought, by contrast, of Varnishing days when in front of pictures men and women pushed one another.

Here, on the contrary, two men who had struck elbows by accident begged pardon with vexation, gracefully, as if they felt that they were observed. The wall was covered with frames, and most frames contained faces, and these faces were of an elevated world. These faces looked out at one with its austerity.

The brush or the graver of Whistler had fixed upon canvas or paper their immobile appearance, and yet their eyes saw, their ears listened, their mouths spoke. These men and women continued to live with the air that they had at a certain hour of their existence and of their minds.

The portrait of Thomas Carlyle, lent by the Glasgow Corporation, faced the portrait of Whistler's mother, lent by the French Government by special decree of President Loubet. In the inscription on the frame of this picture the painter's second name was spelled "MacNiel."

A commentator exclaimed, "It is not a bad error! Proper names have no orthography in France. But the Carlyle has a bad error. Its inscription ascribes Whistler to the English school. He is of no school, he is of Whistler, only."

The catalogue says, "Whistler is wrongly described on the frame of this picture as belonging to the English School." The blacks, the whites, and the gray that in these two great portraits seem to be ashes fallen from the mysterious clepsydra of ages are of England, though! "The colors have changed a little, don't you think?" asked Raven-Hill.

"No," I replied, "they have not changed." They are the blacks, the whites, the pink of cheeks and lips, the gray and the mist on the Thames at Chelsea, that I have always seen with awed admiration in Whistler's portraits.

Oh, the beautiful idea that he had of people! He saw them through his soul, and he gave to them disdain of the commonplace, aspiration to great things, a superb intellectual distinction.

I suppose that what disconcerts in him those who are not yet captivated by his genius is his silence about the ordinary. He has an air of not being there.

A young woman who stood in front of the portrait of Pablo Sarasate, lent by the Carnegie Art Gallery of Pittsburg, said to Mr. Pennell: "Was I not right to think that you did not need my uncle's portrait for your exhibition? It is superb, your exhibition!

"Was I not right? Some of the portraits that are here have already changed owners, and they seem to me to live in furnished apartments. Our Whistler has never been out of our house."

She would not deliver it to the indiscretion of the public. The public did not need it. It saw the "White Girl" that the Paris official salon of 1863 refused and that Napoleon III. acclaimed at his "Salon des Refuses."

The portrait of Miss Alexander, in white muslin, trimmed with gray; the portrait of Theodore Duret in evening dress, carrying on his arm a pink opera cloak and in his hand a red fan; the portrait of Henry Irving as Philip of Spain, that a Velasquez should envy; the first picture that Whistler exhibited, his "Mere Gerard," which he gave to Swinburne; the "Falling Rocket," that was a document in the painter's suit against Ruskin; the "Valparaiso," a Nocturne, musical as a work of Chopin, blue with dots of red; the "Blue Wave."

There were the "Shipping on the Thames," lent by P. A. B. Widener; the "Piano Picture," wherein Lady Seymour Haden sits, playing, with an intensity of expression which is inimitable, while her little daughter stands looking at her and listening; the portrait of L. A. Ionides, with black hair and brown beard; the portrait of F. R. Leyland in evening dress, with a gray overcoat on his arm and a silver buckle on his shoe; the etchings of the Windsor collection, lent by King Edward; lithographs of the collections of Mrs. William McNeill Whistler, Madame Marchesi and T. Way, the etcher's printer; collected proof-sheets, autographs, sketches, daguerreotypes of the artist and his relatives and "That Butterfly . . . !"

"That Butterfly . . . !" which provoked Mr. Baring's exclamation is the butterfly of Whistler's signature, reproduced in ancient velvet. The body is old-gold colored, the eyes are black, the wings are two old-gold colored and two mauve, with four black marks resembling nail heads.

A slip of paper, attached to the butterfly by a string, bears an inscription by Whistler. It says, "My Butterfly" and "Au plaisir." It is, in its subtle harmony of colors, Whistler's butterfly signature, but he varied its form infinitely, and he did not let it express always pleasure.

Often it expressed bitterness, habitually it expressed sarcasm. In his great pictures it had a spectral appearance, and then it was as if he had wished to sign with his soul.

Little Editorials from the People

WILL JUSTICE BE DONE NAN PATTERSON?

Editor BOSTON AMERICAN:

Nan Patterson, with a propense to evil, probably an inclination of fate, a creature of impulse, an object of pity, a poor, degraded creature from a moral standpoint possibly guilty of murder, with the sight of the electric chair straight before her, a menace by day, a phantom by night, an ever present vision with all its horrors vividly pictured to disturb her wretched mind, stirred by the emotions of her being, the ever increasing memories of her past, the dark and gloomy forebodings of the future, stands to-day a mark, an unobstructed target for the merciless tirade of words and accusations such as perhaps was never before meted out to a prisoner in a court of justice.

Will justice predominate in her case? If this possibly deserving human being should be made to suffer the penalty of a murderess, would justice be done? Only she herself knows and not those who were the instruments in the hands of a commonwealth through which her conviction was promoted.

To my mind the counsel for the prosecution is acting a part, cleverly done, it must be cleverly done, to uphold a reputation similarly gained, even should it be at the expense of the conviction of an innocent being for the crime of murder. Here is a case he must win at all hazards, for his reputation is at stake. Be the woman innocent or guilty, it matters not, she must be proven guilty. Should this same man be placed upon the side of the defendant, would he not work with as much zeal and ardor for the acquittal of his client?

The following statement must be true, that justice or injustice only predominates through the aid of able counsel. Does a man do justice to himself, to his fellow man, or to his God, under such conditions?

Should this young woman be placed in the electric chair, the ignoble creation of the monstrosity of man, and there give up her life as a forfeit to the State without convincing evidence of her guilt, but instead through the elegant plea of counsel capable of producing in the minds of an illiterate number of men the proofs of her guilt, what, then, should be the cry of the public at large?

Independent of sex, has there not been enough slaughter of innocent victims in the past, through blundering trials and circumstantial evidence. And still we find our courts of justice willing to send recruits into the world unknown, without first knowing for a certainty whether or not they are deserving of the punishment, according to our barbarous laws that uphold capital punishment.

It is time the public cried out in a loud voice that should be heard from the Pacific coast to the Atlantic, from the Canadian border to the confines of Texas, a voice that should penetrate every State of this Union with its sweeping cry, no more capital punishment.

Let us watch this case closely, and should Nan Patterson be condemned to death, let all the people of this United States that have the hearts of Christians cry out with one accord, down with capital punishment.

HARRY COLON WOOD.
